On whom the graces all attend, And she's prudent, smart and witty.

On her cheeks roses with lillies blend, 'Neath sparkling eyes, so rosy bright Their light from heaven seems to descend To charm, and give to all delight.

And few there be, in mind or form, Who equals her-and none excel; For her great heart is ever warm, Where faith and hope forever dwell. While her sweet modesty is such It draws all virtuous hearts to her, Till all think she deserves as much Praise, as mortals can on her confer.

For she's no doll, or parlor drone, Tho' a paragon in form and dress, Who as a palace keeps, her home, Making it a glorious place to rest. Radiated by her sweet smiles, More precious far than gold or gems, To lean the soul from vicious wilds And lead it up to higher realms.

A sweeter, purer little miss, Hath never dwelt on earth before; Perfect almost as one in bliss, And all who know her, say 'tis so. She wears no jewels or costly gems, But keeps all around her so very neat She wins from all their best esteem Where'ere she goes, is seen, or met.

She's ever gentle, warm and mild, A perfect woman in every place; Offers his services to the people of Cheerfully innocent, as a child, Office in Maj.
