Farm Dependency.

One of the principal advantages in keeping up the fertility of the farm, is that it places the farmer in a condition to increase the number of stock kept on the farm. Fertility of soil is an important item, not only with the cultivated fields but with the meadows and pastures as well. If the farm is to feed the largest number possible. keeping them in good, thrifty condition, it is very important that every acre on the farm should be made to yield the largest possible crop; and a nice soil is the foundation of this. It requires good management, good farming, to grow good crops every year and at the same time build up the fertility, yet it can be done by adopting a regular system of rotation, keeping a sufficient number of stock to consume all the products of the farm, making, saving and applying all the manure possible; taking pains to secure the largest yield by thorough preparations, good seed and cultivation.

Horses and cows change their clothing regularly, and need some extra care while this necessary process is going on. It is hastened by good feeding, and this is especially important, for horses soon to be put to work. The making of a new coat takes much the same elements of nutrition that furnish bone and muscle, hence while the new coat is growing, horses are somewhat weaker than after this work is finished. It arouses all the excretory organs into activity, thereby cleansing and purifying the system, freeing it from all manner of blood-poisons, no matter from what cause they have arisen. All diseases originating from a torpid or deranged liver, or from impure blood, yield to its wonderful curative properties.
