In one short piece I cannot write specially of all these things, but my farm, as above laid off, wish to state what I think is the true key to Southern agriculture: Animal and in natural proportion. The prime object of farming is to make a living, not merely to keep soul and body toed in the great house of nature for us to subsist upon. So if we undertake to till the earth without regard to a variety, both in the animal and vegetable kingdoms, our farming is unnatural, and we do ourselves great injury, both in paysical and moral sense, and treat our Creator as having made many things in vain. Ask our southern farmer what he works so hard in the blazing sun for, and he answers-"to make a !iv-One more question and we

Farming in Meck enburg Gounty.

It is a beautiful country about Charlotte, and the farmers are a thrifty class. I rode out to the Wadsworth farm to see a sample of what a Southern farmer can do when he turns his attention to agriculture. There are reason for it. In the first place, I 32) acres in all, and of these 224 are in grass, the varieties being clover, orchard grass, timothy and lucerne. Timlife and vegetable life must go together, the lowland, and cut two crops per othy and clover are sowed together on year.
