

Bill Nye on a Bee Farm.

SOME STINGING REMARKS ABOUT THE BUSY LITTLE BIRDS. It is now the appropriate season for living bees. Bees should not be hived until they swarm. Bees begin to swarm as soon as the new queen takes the oath of office. The queen is a long-waisted bee who does the toil. The honey bee proper belongs to the order Hymenoptera. All bees according to Linnaeus, who kept several stands of bees himself, are included in the genus Apis, but they are now divided into many genera. I love to study the bee and at one time kept bees myself. I kept several of them longer than I should have done. But honey bees are full of interest to me. I think of the language of a late writer who goes on to state "that within so small a body should be contained an apparatus for converting the various sweets which it collects into one kind of nourishment for itself, another for the common brood, glue for its carpentry, wax for its cells, poison for its enemies, honey for its master, with a proboscis as long as the body itself, microscopic in several parts, telescopic in its mode of action, with a sting so exceedingly sharp that were it magnified by the same glass that makes the needle's point seem a quarter of an inch across, it would yet be invisible and this, too, a hollow tube—that all these varied operations and contrivances should be included within half an inch of length and two grains of matter, is surely enough to crush all thoughts of atheism and materialism." I also compare sometimes, the new colony just starting out to hustle themselves, with the Pilgrim Fathers, where are they? who came to these wild, inhospitable shores, taking their long, tedious, uneventful voyage across the unknown ocean with no relaxation whatever except prayer. Prof. Jaeger, referring to the pronounced habits of industry born in the bee and frequently alluded to in school books, says: "It is impossible for any reflecting person to look at a bee hive in full operation without being astonished at the activity and surprising industry of its inhabitants. We see crowds constantly arriving from the woods, meadows, fields and gardens, laden with provisions and materials for future use, while others are continually flying off on similar collecting expeditions. Some are carrying out the dead, others are removing dirt and others are giving battle to new strangers who may dare to intrude. Suddenly a cloud appears and the bees hurry home, thronging the entrance by thousands, until all are gradually received within the enclosure. In the interior of the hive we see with what skill they work their combs and deposit the honey, and when their labor is over for the day, they rest in chains suspended from the ceiling of their habitation, one bee clinging by its fore feet to the hind feet of the one above it until it seems impossible that the upper one can be strong enough to support the weight of so many hundreds. The queen, during the propagating season, lays as high as two thousand eggs in a day, and I have given much thought to the grafting of the queen bee upon the Plymouth Rock hen with a view to better egg facilities, but so far to meet with very little success. My experiments have been somewhat delayed by the loss of time in taking the swelling out of myself after each perusal of the bee character in his or her home life. The queen lives much longer than any other class of inhabitants and hangs on to the throne as the historian Motley says, like a pup to a goat. She has a stinger but does not use it on boys. She uses it simply for the purpose of fighting other queens. The ancients were aware of the existence of a governing bee in each hive, but they thought it was a king. But a scientist with keen insight and massive brains one day saw the monarch come off the nest and leave 2,124 warm eggs. Then it was settled in his mind that it could not be a king, for he was a deep, deep man. His name was Swammerdam, and he made this discovery about 200 years ago last week. Aristotle and Virgil claimed in several articles, signed Veritas and Tax-payer respectively, that the queen or king, as they called it then, did not lay at all. Later secured some kind of pollen or other material from flowers, which produced the maggots from which the bee was hatched. A writer on the bee says that the best way to ascertain the location of the queen is to divide the swarm, after which it will be noticed that the one having the queen will become very restless indeed. I tried this myself and noticed that they were restless. They also communicated their restlessness to me. All of us got restless. Swammerdam tied the queen by means of a long hair to a high pole in order to ascertain whether the swarm would follow. In ten minutes he had the colony on top of the pole. The drones are the male bees of the hive. They do no work except to act in a parental capacity and mate. They have no stinger, but in its place they have a good appetite and a baritone voice. They are destroyed by the workers soon after the honey season and the widows have it all their own way. The drone leads a quiet and rather sunny life, lasting about sixteen weeks, after which he is put to death by the females of the hive by the May-briek method. About nine-tenths of the hive are workers or females, say twelve or fifteen thousands. They are the busy bees referred to in the books. They get up early in the morning, eat a hasty meal, and go out looking for honey. They fly with great force and as straight as a bullet. Sometimes they try to go through a man on their way to the hive. A bee likes to have a tender young man with linen trousers sit down on it.

From the time the egg is deposited until a perfect bee is turned out requires about three weeks. A queen gets her growth in sixteen days and begins to reign.

Moths get into the bee hives frequently during the winter season and destroy the insects. For this reason bees should be packed in stuff or fine-cut tobacco in the Fall. This nauseates the moth and discourages him. Great care should be used not to let the bees out too early in the Spring. A good writer says that frozen fruit will still remain on the trees in Spring which while it contains a certain amount of sweet, is liable to ferment and cause widespread cholera in the hive followed by cholera infantum and coma. Linnaeus says that nothing is more pitiful than the picture of fifteen or sixteen thousand colicky bees suddenly called forth in the dead of night, running hither and thither looking for hot cloths and Jamaica ginger, after eating too heartily of frozen apple juice. Bees swarm about 10 a. m. or 3 p. m. and enjoy doing so on Sunday, if possible. Selecting a hot Sabbath and waiting patiently until the farmer has shaved on one side of his face and lathered the other, the bees decide that they will swarm. The farmer's wife notices it while she is in the garden getting a sprig of caraway to take to meeting. She calls Henry and tells him the bees are swarming. He starts out with a new hive, and looking up in the air, he falls over a croquet set and injures himself. His wife says: "Henry, you ought to put on that mosquito-bar arrangement I made for you the other day. They are real cross this morning and they will certainly sting you if you don't." "Get out with your pesky nonsense," he thot straightway reply. "I never put anything on me before and I won't do it now." "But Henry, they are so feverish today and you have got your other clothes on, so they won't know you. Do try it this time." "So he wraps up his head in a green moquito net and puts on a pair of cowhide gloves. The bees alight on a tall elm tree and he puts a ladder up there against it. Then he slowly ascends the tree with a beehive under his arm. Just before he put on the moquito net he took a large chew of tobacco. He now wishes that he had not. People began to go by on their way to meeting and see him up in the tree with a large green head on him and hot leather gloves. They speak to him, but he cannot reply because his mouth is full of tobacco. It is very hot indeed. The sun pours down through the hot leaves and the breeze is taking a much needed rest. He gets up in the top of the tree and looks like a new style lizard. Sabbath school boys wearing chip hats faced with gingham, pause on their way to the house of worship and watch him. He reaches out to scoop in a handful of the brown fuzzy insects, but the leather mits smell stangely to them. They do not recognize the proprietor by his paws and his odor. Three or four bees fall down inside those mittens and feeling that they must defend themselves, make a hot highway across the back of his hand. Then Henry yells and drops the hive on the Bible case. Some bees get under his green veil and his hair, and finding that they cannot get out, they sink on him with their little, heated hypodermics and he says things which bring the blush to the features of his sad wife. For days afterwards they sit opposite each other at the table and do not say anything. He looks at her savagely with one eye, the other being closed by his creditors. It is three days before he will even ask her to pass the butter, he is so mad. Bees are very industrious, but fool themselves by accumulating more than they need, forgetting that they will soon die and leave their substance for the use of those who did not earn it. We should learn a lesson from the bee and not run the matter of industry into the ground. We should not strive to accumulate so much that it will prevent our enjoyment during life-time and only enrich the idle after our death. Bees should remember that their shrouds will not hold honey. The bee could learn much from man, I think, in this way. BILL NYE.

Mother's Style vs. Father's.

He looked very pale, tired and dejected as he threw himself on the lounge in the dark corner of the room. "Mom, I'm so sick," he sighed with a suppressed groan. "My poor boy! What ails you?" "Sick." "What made you so sick?" "Pa said at dinner time I would be sick if I ate another dumpling, but I didn't believe him, I eat another one and I'm sick." "I'm sorry, I guess I'll have to give you a dose of castor oil." "I would rather be sick, ma, than to take oil." "Not if I put it in porter, then you won't taste the oil." "I don't want it." "Won't you, dear, if I give you a cup of jelly to eat to take the taste of the oil out of your mouth?" "Give me a big piece of cake to eat with the jelly?" "Yes, dear." "And a big orange?" "Yes, my poor sick boy." "A big bunch of bananas and some candy?" "Yes, dear." Andy's father came in at this point, and spoiled the boy's prospects of a feast of good things. Going up to Andy and inquiring what the trouble was, Andy's voice became very weak and in an almost inaudible whisper he gasped, "sick." In fact his voice was so weak his sire was obliged to stoop down to catch the word, and at the same time caught the fragrance of a "two-for-five" breath. "Sick, hey? Been smoking, hey? You young Arab! (Cuffs him.) Smoking cigars, hey? (Boxes his ears.) I'll learn you to smoke; come along here." And he takes Andy in the back yard and with a shingle persuaded him to never try again to obtain good things under false pretense, while his mother stood by wringing her hands in anguish at her dear boy's punishment, and mentally vowing Andy's father a brute. —Noirstorm Herald.

To Cure the Taste for Liquor.

The New York Sun published a letter from an anonymous correspondent asking: "Can any one give me a cure for drunkenness?" I will in the same way give your correspondent a cure through you, if you will publish it. Indulgence in spirits after awhile—which is longer or shorter according to the constitution of the person—produces irritation, inflammation and fever of the stomach, hence the craving for drink; and the greater the fever the greater the craving. As spirits act also on the nervous system and on the brain, the nervous system becomes impaired and the brain weakened. Who can deny that a person ailing in these several ways is laboring under a serious disease? He has then no power to exercise, because the seat of the will is in the nervous centres, and when these are impaired or destroyed, so is also the will power. Here is the cure: Let the person have within his reach a small vial of the best kind of tincture of Peruvian bark, and when the craving for liquor comes on him let him take a teaspoonful of the tincture every two hours. In a few days the taste for liquor is destroyed, and destroyed while indulging in it, for tincture of Peruvian bark is spirits into which has been drawn all the substance of Peruvian bark. It is to be found in every drug store, but it should be of the very best. Peruvian bark is a tonic. It is also the best, if not the only, cure known for fever. It is from Peruvian bark that quinine is extracted, and moreover, it is an anti-periodic. It is by these three agencies that it destroys the craving for liquor. Any one wishing to be cured of that ailment can be in the way I have described, but there are few drunkards indeed who wish to be cured. —Noirstorm Herald.

The ministers of Charleston in their ministerial union have adopted a resolution that they will endeavor to stimulate the public conscience by setting forth more pointedly than ever the divine law against the reckless shedding of blood and immorality, and the course which is entailed upon a community by a refusal to punish the crime of murder. And they invoke the pulpit of South Carolina to join in the work.

Saved From Consumption.

Several physicians predicted that Mr. Asa B. Rowley, Druggist, of Chicago, would soon have consumption caused by an aggravated case of Catarrh. Customers finally induced him to try CLARKE'S EXTRACT OF FLAX (Papilion) CATARRH CURE. He says: "The result was unprecedented. I commenced to get well after the first application and am now, after a few weeks, entirely cured. It will do the same for you. Price $1.00. Try Clarke's Flax Soap for the Skin and you will use it often. 25 cents. All of Clarke's remedies are for sale by Jno. H. Emiss, in the United States.

IF A BODY MEET A BODY the result is a collision, whether "coming thro' the eye," or not. Life is full of collisions. We are constantly colliding with some body or something. If it be with our neighbors it is with some dread disease that "knocks us off the track" and perhaps disables us for life. Women especially it seems, have to bear the brunt of more collisions and afflictions than mankind. In all cases of nervousness, bearing-down sensations, tenderness, periodical pains, sick headache, constipation, inflammation, or ulceration and all female irregularities and "weaknesses," Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to the rescue of women as no other medicine does. Lynch-Seed.

It seems that the courts in many instances are operating in the interest of lynch-law. Such will be the reflection of many lovers of justice and equity upon reading the trial and acquittal of McDow at Charleston for the murder of Editor Dawson. All the circumstances as they first appeared indicated a foul, cold-blooded murder, and the evidence as given on trial did not change the earlier impression. It is scarcely possible that if Dawson had been killed for justifiable reasons before the law his slayer would have done otherwise than make an immediate revelation of the occurrence, but he not only did not do that, but on the contrary attempted to bury the body; and in addition it was shown most clearly that the murdered man was shot from behind. Now just how these known facts could be explained away and the conclusion be reached that McDow shot his adversary in self-defence, would seem utterly impossible to common sense. Some influential Northern newspaper says that "no white man has been hung in South Carolina for twenty-five years." If this be a fact, and we are inclined to believe it, it is a pity that South Carolina failed to avail herself of the opportunity to change her record by hanging the bloody-handed McDow. But what are some juries worth anyhow? What are they worth when they are depraved and ignorant, and when there are so many hanging murderers in the community to exact their influence in favor of letting the guilty go free. And what are the probabilities of hanging a white man in a State that has not hung one for twenty-five years. That is what we call sowing lynch-seed. It is nothing less; and the harvest is sure to come. And we shall know where the chief blame is to rest.

Wash Your Hands.

Cases of infection that could be accounted for in no other way have been explained by the fingers as vehicle. In handling money, especially of paper, door-knobs, banisters, and a hundred things that every one must frequently touch, there are chances innumerable of picking up germs of typhoid, scarlatina, diphtheria, small-pox, etc. Yet some persons actually put such things in their mouths, if not too large. Before eating, or touching that which is to be eaten, the hands should be scrupulously washed. We hear much about general cleanliness as "next to godliness." It may be added that here, in particular it is also ahead of health and safety. The Jews made no mistake in that "except they washed they ate not." It was a sanitary ordinance as well as an ordinance of decency. —Sanitary Era.

How to Distinguish Good Meat.

Prof. V. C. Vaughan, of the Michigan State Board of Health, says: Good beef has a reddish-brown color and contains no clots of blood. Well nourished beefs furnish a flesh which white raw is marked with spots of white fat; it is firm and compact. Old, lean animals furnish a flesh which is tough, dry and dark; the fat is yellow. Veal is slightly reddish and has tender white fibers. The fat is not distributed through the lean as in beef. The same is true of mutton. In well nourished animals white fat accumulates along the borders of the muscles. Pork is rose-red and has fat distributed through the muscle. The lard is fat and lies in heavy deposits under the skin. Good beef is not of a pale pink color, and such a color indicates that the animal was diseased. Good beef does not have a dark purple hue for this color is evidence that the animal has not been slaughtered, but died with the blood in its body, or has suffered from acute febrile affection. Good beef has no, or but little, odor; or, if any odor is perceptible, it is not disagreeable. In judging as to the odor of meat pass a clean knife, which has been dipped in hot water, through it and examine subsequently as to the odor of the knife. Tainted meat often gives off a plain perceptible and disagreeable odor when being cooked. Good beef is elastic to touch. Meat that is wet and floppy should be discarded. It should not come gelatinous after being kept in a cool place for two days, but should remain dry on the surface and firm to the touch. —Monthly Bulletin, R. I. Board of Health.

A Good Meal.

Charles Dickens used to say that he judged the quality of housekeeping by the condition of the castors on the table. If the mustard was freshly made, the silver brilliant, and the pepper box perpendicular, he expected a good, clean, well-served meal, "with behavior to match." If, on the contrary, the casters were uncleaned and out of order, he knew what to expect and was seldom disappointed. It is, in truth, simple things that denote quality. The test of a good cook is not the cake she makes, nor the mysterious sauces she can concoct, nor the rich pudding she can produce. A good cook is known by her boiled potatoes, her mutton chop, her roast pig. Such things require personal care judgment, and are the basis of a good meal.

Cheerfulness keeps up a kind of daylight in the mind, filling it with a steady and perpetual serenity.—Addison.
