Snow with rain fell here last Saturday evening.

The sudden approach of bad weather caught many without a supply of fuel.

It is all right to say blow your own horn, but some men haven't any horn to blow.

Know thyself. If you can't get the requisite information, run for sheriff next year.

You just bring a couple of little quarrels into your family and they'll breed like sparrows.

The Thanksgiving turkey has made appearance on our market, and he is a noble bird, too.

Mr. W. C. Coleman, of Cabarrus county, has bought the Misenheuer plantation near Salisbury.

The completion of the Yadkin Railroad will probably insure the building of the union depot for Salisbury.

J. A. Ludwig, of this county, has bought a bone mill and will at once start grinding bones for fertilizing purposes.

Mr. Roseman, he of the jail, will be relieved of part of his pain next week, as a number of felons will then be off of his hands.

Mrs. G. P. Erwin of Morganton is visiting Mr. Theo. F. Kluttz. A host of friends in Salisbury are always glad to see Mrs. Erwin.

There will be services at St. Mary's church next Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m., and at Cowan's school House at 3 o'clock p. m. by Rev. B. S. McKeuzie.

Part of the Catawba bridge, eight miles below Charlotte, was washed away last Monday by a freshet and has caused north bound trains to run behind for several days.

Mr. Jim Graham, living near Cleveland, N. C., is reported as having quite a curiosity in four pigs, each having eight feet. A fine chance for a person who likes pickled pig feet.

So far as we have been able to gather the recent appointments of Gov. Fowle to the Chief and Associate Justiceship of the Supreme Court of the State, have given general satisfaction in this community.

An old saying prevails that court week at Salisbury is a dull week. The present term, thus far, is no exception to the rule. Local news outside of the court house is scarce, and little has transpired there that would interest our readers.

We wonder if all our road overseers have complied with the law which makes it their duty to see that sign boards are placed at all forks and cross roads on the public roads. We wouldn't be surprised if indictments were made in some cases.

Mr. P. C. Saunders and a brother from Texas arrived in Salisbury last night. Mr. Saunders says the report to the effect that the property on which the late discovery of gold in Montgomery county was made is untrue, it has not been sold but still belongs to him.

James F. Spear, of Pointexter, N. C., desires information of his sister, Mary J. Spear, daughter of Jesse Spear. She lived in Lexington with her aunt just after the war, Margaret Earheart, but is said to have died in Salisbury sometimes afterwards. There is a small estate due her.

The new iron front building of Mr. J. A. Clodfelter is nearing completion, and when completed will be the handsomest business house in town. The architect is a new departure in Salisbury and we hope will give impetus to builders hereafter to imitate the modern ideas of Mr. Clodfelter.

Next Thursday will be Thanksgiving day and all business in Salisbury will be suspended for that day. Our country friends will take notice that no cotton will be bought and the stores will all be closed. Joint services will be held in one of the churches but it has not been given out yet which one.

By the direction of Fulton Lodge, boxes will be placed on the corners of the public square on Thanksgiving day (24th) for the purpose of collecting such contributions in money, as the public see proper to donate for the support of the orphans at the Oxford Orphan Asylum. Contributions in the way of clothing, etc., will be received by Mr. A. Parker, chairman of the Asylum committee at his place of business.

"To discontinue an advertisement." says John Wanamaker, Philadelphia's great merchant, "is like taking down your sign. If you want to do business you must let the public know it. Standing advertisements are better and cheaper than reading notices. They look more substantial and business-like, and inspire confidence. I would as soon think of doing business without clerks as without advertising."

It seems that the Internal Revenue department at Washington is determined to put a stop to manufacturing whisky in the South, not from a prohibition standpoint, however, but for the purpose of placing the business exclusively in the hands of a few mammoth concerns located north of Mason's and Dixon's line, in other words monopolists for whose benefit the government is run nowadays. A few distillers in this section have been blessed upon flimsy evidence.

Van Wyck's store is going to do some shooting and as it is "too heavily loaded" some one is going to get hurt, but it will not be the buyers of those bargains he is offering. Just think of a New York Mills shirt at 66cts. Read his new ad. and go to his store and you will be surprised at the bargains he is offering.

The St. Cecilia Club and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will hold a joint-meeting next Friday evening at 7:30 o'clock, at the residence of Mr. E. B. Neave. Everybody cordially invited to attend. The meeting this week falls on Saint Cecilia's day and the company is expected to be unusually large and the programme very attractive.

Bishop R. K. Hargrave of the Methodist Episcopal church South will, by special request, preach in the Methodist church at this place on Monday night. All are invited to attend the service and hear this eminent divine. Bishop Hargrave will preside at the North Carolina Conference, which convenes at Greensboro on Tuesday the 27th inst.

Wilmington Messenger in speaking of the Lutheran Synod now in session in that city has the following to say of our townsman Mr. Heilig: "Col. P. N. Heilig, of Salisbury, N. C., is another conspicuous and zealous member of the synod. He was raised in Rowan county, and has been active in merchandizing, farming and milling. He is a pleasant and intelligent gentleman and is much respected in the Synod."

Stany and Montgomery.

These two counties have been landlocked for many years while their neighbors have been flourishing under the exhilarating influence of railroads and an easy communication with the outside commercial world. Our long and somewhat familiar acquaintance with the territory and people, have led us to believe that there is a great opening for both counties, and it is quite certain that when once penetrated by a railroad much more will be found in them than has been supposed. To say nothing of the gold deposits which now and then come to light and startle the public by their richness, we have just learned of two other sources of wealth in these counties which time will demonstrate to be of more value, perhaps, than all the precious metals yet washed out from their gulches and hills.

A broken sandstone quarry in the southern part of the county, equal to, or even better, than the celebrated Anson county quarry, is one of these sources. It is of very large extent and only yet prospected; but it is there, and will afford permanent business for a railroad once it is reached. Mr. C. C. Wade, of Troy, is interested in this valuable property and can give further information to those desiring it.

The other source of wealth alluded to, is in Stany, about five miles east of Albemarle. It consists of a ledge of Slate, of superior quality and miles in extent, capable of being split to any thickness, and obtainable in slabs of almost any dimensions. It is of a dark gray color, splits out very smooth and straight, and is well adapted to the purposes for which slate is employed.

These are certainly important items, if found on practical test to be as represented.

Mr. Henry Ivy, of Bileville, is referred to for further information about the slate.

HATTERSHOP ALLIANCE.

Whereas, Our Alliance has been visited by the monster, death, the second time since its organization, and claimed for its victim our beloved brother, Henry A. Camp, on the 20th of October, 1889, in the prime of life—at the age of 30 years. And as we are unwilling to let our brother's death pass without giving some testimonial of our esteem for him:

We therefore draft the following resolutions of respect:

Resolved, That we, the members of Hattershop Alliance No. 1882, of which he was a worthy member, bow with becoming reverence to the will of Him who doeth all things well, who is too wise to err and too good to be unkind.

Resolved, That we sincerely mourn his loss as a friend and brother, and may God in His wisdom and mercy bless the bereaved family, and may they remember that He hath said, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

Resolved, That a copy of the above be placed upon the minutes of the Alliance, that a copy be sent to the family of our deceased brother, and that a copy be sent to the Progressive Farmer, the Carolina Watchman and the N. C. Herald for publication. Signed, G. F. FRICK, G. B. KESLER, J. A. LENTZ, Committee.

Continuance.

We can scarcely continue to speak of "distinguished editors of newspapers published in Salisbury," after those mentioned in a former issue. They have been few and far between. The number who experimented in this field in search of fame and wealth from 1843 to 1860, is large; and although the names of themselves and their papers might be found by a patient search through the files of the WATCHMAN for 17 years, it is a labor we cannot undertake at present. The most prominent among them were Frank I. Wilson, G. A. Miller and John Speltman.

MILLER & JAMES.

commenced the publication of the "Rowan-Whig & Advocate," in 1853. It was one of the handsomest papers ever published in the State. Mr. Miller had a passion for newspaper editing, and with the accomplished Mr. James on the mechanical department, they started out admirably, and did well for two and a half years, when they separated. Mr. Miller went to Georgia, and published a paper in Thomaston for a number of years. The "Advocate" changed to the "Salisbury Herald," and after variable fortune for two or three years, expired in the hands of Mr. James.

came upon the field about this time, as editor of a Democratic paper. He was an able writer, but gained no success here, and after a while removed to Raleigh. He lived and labored in Raleigh for many years in various positions and relations, and closed his life there a few months ago.

FRANK I. WILSON, also, after a year or two of editorial work here, commencing in 1853 or '54, removed to Raleigh, where he continued in some newspaper connection for a number of years.

LEWIS HANES.

Of those who did editorial work here after the war, Mr. Lewis Hanes stood most prominently forward. He commenced the publication of "The Old North State," April 2, 1866. His political character and fame are well remembered by many who read his paper and observed his career. The writer being intimately acquainted with him may be allowed to say, personally, he was a sincere, candid and upright man, and sought to know and to do what he believed to be just and true. He succeeded in possession to a printing office brought here in 1865 by Hampton & Cole (Hampton of Raleigh and Cole of Baltimore), which, however, ended an existence of only two or three months by some defalcation of Cole. Mr. Hanes closed his editorial career here in September, 1871. He engaged, for a short time, in writing for the leading Republican paper in Raleigh, but not finding his position pleasant, retired to his home in Davidson county, where he subsequently died.

J. J. STEWART.

This gentleman re-entered upon editorial work shortly after the war, and, with intervals, has continued in the business down to the present time. He has been a self-denying, laborious toiler, and one of the sharpest writers since the days of Frank I. Wilson.

There have been almost scores of other men who have started and run newspapers here for a short while, which earned no position worthy of note, and for omitting to mention them we beg to be excused.

There are three newspapers published here now—the "Herald," the "Truth" and the "Watchman." Counting the "Star of Zion," by our colored friends, there are four. The latter, we believe, is the best sustained paper of them all.

In the Mountains of North Carolina.

Representative Ewatts, of North Carolina, is at the Metropolitan. It will be remembered that some months ago it was proposed by the War department to remove Geronimo's band of Mescalero Apaches from Fort Picketts to a reservation in North Carolina. To this plan Governor Fowle of North Carolina made an emphatic protest. He curtly advised Secretary Proctor to remove the pets of the War Department to Vermont. Whether the Green Mountain Yankees would enjoy having the venerable scalptaker camping in their midst, so to speak, was developed by subsequent correspondence, but this much has been learned. The Tar Heels are not rallying with entire unanimity under Governor Fowle's banner of exclusion. On the contrary, there are abundant evidences that the Apaches would be looked upon with favor as residents of North Carolina.

Away up in the extreme southwestern corner of North Carolina lie the counties of Cherokee and Swain. The old Cherokee reservation embraced that region and the weak remnants of that once powerful tribe still roam the Cowie Mountains. These Cherokees are anxious that the Apaches should be joined to them, that intermarriage may strengthen and preserve the race. Moreover, the white residents of that region are willing to part with any number of square miles of mountain and ravine to Uncle Sam for a consideration, and look upon an importation of bloodthirsty savages as a feature of interest, rather than otherwise.

To forward this scheme of importation in behalf of poor La, Congressman Ewart has come to Washington. It is understood that his mission has not been successful and that in the near future Mescaleros will be domiciled in the region of moonshine whisky and Miss Murfree's romances. If the Apaches take on a scalping fever, then the mounters will make short work of them. As their names indicate, this branch of the Apaches are Mescaleros—lovers of mescal. Undoubtedly they will take kindly to the juice of roan, which is said to be very fine around Roan Mountain and south to the Hackawaxy.—Washington Cor. N. Y. Star.

Sir Wilfred Lawson makes a strong point in a recent speech by quoting Mr. Gladstone as saying that "the drinking which goes on in the United Kingdom brings upon England the accumulated evils of war, pestilence and famine."

National Jackson Club.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 19.—The National Jackson Club, which was organized here yesterday, has issued the following address: The perpetuity of a Republican free government rests upon the patriotism of the people. In proportion as patriotism degenerates or is alloyed with mercenary desire, does the danger of dissolution increase. The forces that created our government, and developed it into self-sustaining strength were evolved under conditions of oppression and wrong from patriotism, unadulterated with selfish motives, and without the slightest purpose of personal aggrandizement on the part of the patriots who founded, sustained and projected it upon its career.

Unhappily, evidences of decay are bespeakingly manifest, which, unless speedily arrested, may result disastrously. Whereas, heretofore, men sought to serve their country, for the love of their country, now they seek first their own gain, and patriotic instinct is lost in the pell mell scramble for peace and emolument.

Political parties, all of them, make "spells" their first object, and it is gradually being instilled into the public mind that the proper reward of the government for service and the devotion of its sons is sordid lucre rather than the blessings of freedom and protection. It was created to bestow upon them, and when the time comes that it is altogether true that dollars are fit and acceptable compensation to men who battle for their country, then has our government lapsed into a condition that renders it no longer worth perpetuating; indeed, it will be incapable of lasting perpetuation. Having lost the sustaining principle, inevitable disintegration begins.

Patriotism is swallowed up in mercenary greed. Free government will fall a victim to the hastening ills that end in anarchy and disruption. The cloud is now no larger than man's hand, but it heralds the storm and is eloquent of warning. The situation appeals beseechingly to patriotic sons of Columbia to come to the rescue.

How may the danger be arrested? A man lived who by iron will and executive power hurled back the first great danger that menaced our country. His name, a synonym of unflinching patriotism, represents the code of patriotic principles. To draw the nation back to the contemplation of the sublime character of Andrew Jackson is to inculcate the pure and loyal principles upon which his great life was predicted; to have all the people with unanimous voice reiterate the great sentiment, "The Federal Union shall and must be preserved."

To reawaken that reverential devotion to the federal constitution with which he was imbued—to give opportunity again for patriots to pledge their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor to the maintenance of the principles enunciated in that sacred instrument; to teach the great thought that to our country we owe our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor, if need be, in her defense, without other reward than that vouchsafed by her protecting hand.

A number of gentlemen from different States and Territories have organized a National Jackson Club, strictly and absolutely non-partisan in its nature, and to have for its purpose only the encouragement and promotion of patriotic principles. The first annual meeting of the Club is called to assemble in the city of Nashville on the 8th of January, 1890, under the shadow of Jackson's tomb, on the day he made memorable, and to this meeting all the people of our great country are invited, and particularly those who recognize the truths here briefly asserted and are ready to give aid to the movement that has for its purpose the purification of politics and the preservation of liberty.

By order of the executive board. (Signed), L. D. McCORD, Secretary.

Turner's N. C. Almanac for 1890.

Turner's N. C. Almanac for 1890 is just issued. It is published by Jas. H. Ennis, Raleigh. Is printed on new type and is better than ever. Price 10 cents, sent post paid. "Turner's N. C. Almanac" has been regularly issued for over fifty years and is recognized as the standard Almanac of the State. There is no other to compare with it in accuracy of its calculations or the valuable State information which it contains. It has much for housekeeper, gardener, farmer and general reader. Its State Record of the most stirring and important events of the year 1889 is especially interesting and desirable for future reference. To the farmers of the State its facts and suggestions upon farm practice is of great value. Its anecdotes sparkle with wit and humor and will serve during many a leisure hour to "drive dull care away." In fact "Turner's N. C. Almanac" is needed for reference during the year by everybody and everybody ought to have one.

Gold in the Artesian.

Last week while Mr. Moore was at work on the Artesian well, he discovered that the pump was forcing up something very bright; upon examination it was thought to be gold. Dr. Johnson tested it in acid and found it to be pure gold. Shavings of some size, were thrown up, and it seemed to be cut from a larger nugget. It is thought that the well drill cut the small particles from a larger piece, and some is disposed to think there is a gold mine. The well is being bored in the centre of Main street, and from the indications thrown up from the depth of about 200 feet, it is possible that the beautiful town of Scotland Neck is resting over millions of the precious metal. It will probably be investigated, and it may be that a shaft will be sunk in search for the wealth beneath our beautiful streets.—Scotland Neck Democrat.

The republican treasurer of Riley county skipped out the other day, with $30,000 of county funds. Bully! We hope he'll come back and get the safe.—Hider, Kansas.
