When the people were evenly divided, the members of the House were very evenly dived, and there was coma representative body, that just as a all, but that it is simply an organ of Government captured sometimes by one party and sometimes by the other dominant party as the Presidency belongs to the man who secures it even though his majority were only one.

Mr. Reed had a legitimate majority of the session, but for a hundred years legislation as a majority of 80, and when Mr. Reed boasted in Boston that the precedents of 100 years had been overturned he meant that under his sysand without rule, a majority of one man in the House, which would be quite as likely to represent a minorcountry, would be as potent for the a unanimous House would be.

Reed complained that he couldn't always have 100 men present, or even 166 of them, and therefore he wanted n set of rules that would allow less than 166-a minority of the members-to govern. Of course he found it difficult to keep 166 men present when the whole Republican membership was clected 169 Republican members, and that signified that the people were very slightly in favor of the Republiinstead of the sentiment of about half father. the country.

The tabulation of the criminal statistics of the State is now in progress in the Attorney-General's department. A peculiar and rather ludicrous case has been found during the work. It is under the head of "Disturbing Relig- barn. ious Congregation,"and is from a western county.

It seems that a man who had made a very intimate and warm acquaintance with "John Barleycorn" went into a church up there while the minster was preaching.

He was so very deeply impressed (or thought he was) with the minister's preaching, that he wanted to do something to show his appreciation, and after some difficulty he arose from his seat, staggered up to the pulpit, and lunging forward, stuck a bottle of whiskey in the persons face and in a most earnest, hiccoughing way asked the good man if he wouldn't take a

This was a too much for the congregation, and some of the members had the would beaffable individual arrested and tried before a magistrate. This officer fined the prisoner $20,00. The prisoner thought the magistrate had some hard feelings against him, and appealed from the magistrate's decision. The case then went before Judge of the Superior Court who sentenced the offender to two years in the penitentiary and that's where he now
