

On the Fence.
Two women leaned over the back yard fence. (The same old fence) as the sun went down. While each told the other in confidence, the seeds she'd gathered around the town. For women must gossip, or they can't sleep. They think that secrets weren't made to keep; So they lean on the fence in the gloaming.

Two women sat on the front door stoop. In the evening glow, as the sun went down. They told their children had skipped the croquet. And they sneered at the minister's wife's new gown. For women delight in a friendly chat. Without it their lives would be stale and flat; So they sit on the stoop in the gloaming.

Two husbands came home from the baseball game. (From the office, they said,) as the sun went down. Both ready and eager to hear the same Sweet scandals their wives had lauded do down. For men, though they work, love gossip too. And that's why their wives seek something new. As they meet and talk in the gloaming.

A Good Investment.
What person is there in the world that would not make a good investment if the opportunity offered?
Capital seeks good investment, and every man seeks to invest his labor, or his personal efforts, to the best advantage.
A good investment is what we are all seeking, and ever ready to embrace.
Capitalists are glad to invest their money so as to earn six per cent. Landowners and householders are pleased when they can earn ten per cent on the value of their property, annually.
But the man of small or moderate means, cannot invest his effects so as to make a living at the above rates of interest. He must add labor to his capital in order to make both ends meet.
To a man in the latter condition, small investments that will return capital invested three-fold, ten-fold or more, are what he needs and should be on the alert to secure.
The farmer has conditions more favorable for such returns for his money than any other class; legitimate investments only considered. He has the agencies of the soil and the air to aid him, and other conditions suitable for developing and improving animal life surrounding him.
To the average farmer, the poultry on his farm is of little or no consideration. If he gives his hens any thought, it is usually in connection with the women and children, for he thinks chickens, and the like beneath his thoughts and care. At the same time, however, he is ever ready, and hoping to long for a chance to make a good investment—to invest in something that will bring him in some ready cash.
Now then, if we should have any farm in the South turned over to us, and wanted to make money, and have something on it that would yield a steady income, we would have poultry that factor—the agency upon which we should rely for our surest income and best investment.
But it may be said, and truly too, that it takes experience to make a success of it with poultry, and that the writer is more experienced with hens than is the average farmer, and the latter does not see it as we do.
Granting that such may be the case, yet we are able to point out to any farmer, who has common hens, a way to make a good investment.
We know the value of thoroughbred fowls, just as well as the farmer knows the value of his thoroughbred horse or cow; and we know that comparatively, the thoroughbred fowl is as valuable in proportion as the grade cow.
We have kept the record on hens of various kinds and breeds for years, and have ascertained that the common mongrel hen lays on an average of seventy-five eggs in a year. That the hens of the best laying pure bred strains lay one hundred and seventy eggs in the same length of time.
Now this laying trait, or characteristic, is in the blood of any selected variety of good layers, and it may be imparted to mongrel stock by cross breeding. Of course we cannot by a first cross raise the yearly average of half-breeds to that of the full bloods, yet we may lift it far above the average of the straight and ordinary mongrel hen.
Take it, then, that the farmer is wide awake, and wants to make a good investment, and is not ashamed to notice little things (or what may seem to him little things) and to care for them. He has perhaps fifty good old common hens on the place; and they are of no particular strain, simply mongrels, and there has been no male bird of any improved variety introduced among them since our farmer found and collected. They are simply good old dung-hills, laying on the average, seventy-five eggs a year.
But the spirit of investment mores and three or four young thoroughbred cocks from a strain of good, pure bred layers, are introduced among the farmers fifty common cocks that formerly mated with them are either killed or otherwise removed. What is the result? The common hens continue to lay on in their common slow way but the chickens from eggs are no longer straight mongrels, they are grades, or half-breeds; and long before they are a year old, yes even before eight months old, they begin to lay in the course of a year one hundred and twenty-five eggs per hen. This would be a net gain per hen over the average of the common hens, of fifty eggs per hen. This, from fifty hens, would be a gain of 2,500 eggs, or 208 dozen eggs, worth at one cent each, $25 increase in value of eggs in one season.

The cost of the cocks would probably not be more than one fifth of the increase.
The next season the value of the increase would be still greater, for the flock then would still nearer approximate pure bred hens, and so come still nearer the left of their egg average. Thirty dollars would likely be the value of the increase in eggs the second year, and greater still if the flock should be increased.
We give the above facts and suggestions to illustrate how the farmer may increase the revenue of the farm by a little care and attention, and by means of a small investment in the interest of his poultry, and in his own interests as well.—H. B. Geer in Southern Cultivator.

He Couldn't Hear and Kept Talking.
Ped. Thomas was unknown about Newton until he came a candidate last week. The landlord where Ped. stopped, doesn't hear well, and, mistaking Ped. for John Henderson, it is said the interview was amusing to all but Mr. Thomas. The landlord held the candidate's hand and kept straight on talking, not hearing the pretesting remarks of the unhappy but helpful opponent of Mr. Henderson, which follow in parenthesis: Landlord—How'd do Mr. Henderson. (Thomas—This is not—I am glad to see you; (Mr. Ped. Thomas) you have made us a good (you are mistaken—) Congressman. I have always voted for you. (I say you are mistaken. This is Thomas) and I'll do it again. I don't see why some of our people keep talking about that fellow—Thomason or Thomas. (I say my friend this is not Henderson.) They say he is the worst sort of a radical—but Thomas the Alliance candidate—and I would not vote for him—(against Henderson) for anything. He'll get no vote here.
Then the landlord went about his business and Mr. Thomas went out to hunt for Colone Forney.—Press and Carolinian.

Wasted Pity.
Fittsburg Dispatch.
A traveler in a back-woods community, attracted by a noise in a cabin not far from the roadside, stopped, and, addressing a boy that sat on the fence, said:
"You live here, I suppose?"
"Yep, just about."
"Well, can you tell me what makes that peculiar noise up yonder in that cabin?"
"Yep, it's pap an' mam."
"What are they doing—beating a carpet?"
"No, beating 'em 'nother."
"You don't say so?"
"Who said I didn't?"
"I mean is it possible?"
"That's what it is."
"What are they beating each other for?"
"Cause they are fightin'."
"Is it possible that you sit here so complacently and see your father beat your mother?"
"I don't see him a-beaten 'er."
"Yes, but you know that he is."
"I know he's tryin' to. If you're here to pity mam, mister you'd better ride on. Mam's the boss up there. I'll tell you that. Hol' on, did you here that thump? Well, that was dad a-comin' down on the pincin' flo'. Mam hits him, but she lets him drop him-s'f. Reckon you'd better go on, or stay an' pity pap awhile."

Facts Worth Knowing.
In all diseases of the nasal mucous membrane the remedy used must be non-irritating. The medical profession has been slow to learn this. Nothing satisfactory can be accomplished with douches, snuffs, powders or syringes because they are all irritating, do not thoroughly reach the affected surfaces and should be abandoned as worse than failures. A multitude of persons who had for years borne all worry and pain that catarrh can inflict testify to the cure wrought by Elys Cream Balm.
