An English professor has been experimenting with a movable mirror and platform to determine the causes of seasickness and a remedy for the distressing complaint. He found that the sight of a moving mirror produced sensations like ea-sickness, and when the observer was placed on a platform that was given the same motion as that of a vessel it took only a few minutes to induce nausea. His conclusions were that any one who suffered from sea sickness may largely escape this malady by looking at the sky or the horizon, taking care that no part of the moving vessel intervenes, or, better still, by bandaging the eyes. His hints are worth following by all poor sailors.
