Thus far North Carolina exhibits at the World's Fair have won 124 medals and awards, and several "groups" are yet to be heard from.

We have not considerable interest in the result in Virginia, and at last have the figures at hand.

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle, the highest authority in the country in such matters, says in its issue of Saturday last that "slow but evident progress appears to be making toward the revival of our industries—every indication continues as favorable as could be expected."

A fourth great tunnel is to be put under the Alps, this time at the Simpson pass. Ever since the time of the first Napoleon tourists have traveled by diligence over the great military road which he built over the Alps at that point and have duly admired the engineering genius of the military conqueror.

The Washington correspondent of the Richmond Dispatch says that it will be refreshing news to the aspirants and others in Virginia and North Carolina to hear that the President, according to a piece of information obtained here today, has determined that during next month wholesale removals of presidential postmasters will be made.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

The fool-killer ought to have been in Washington this week. He might have worked twenty-four hours every day without completing his job.

There are now two distinct and well-defined elements of the Democracy in this State, outside of the Alliance Populists. One is in part, and it may be said chiefly represented by Senator M. W. Ransom, an administration anti-free silver Democrat; the other by Senator Z. B. Vance, anti-Cleveland free silver Democrat.

From the many persistent and urgent appeals made by the majority of the State papers to its delinquent subscribers, we are led to believe that the credit system in the newspaper business is getting from bad to worse.

Owing to the time of the President being taken up with his message to Congress and that of the members of the cabinet with their annual reports, there will probably be very few appointments made until after Congress meets.

NORTH CAROLINA POLITICS.

As Viewed from a Republican Standpoint. The Raleigh correspondent of the Washington Post gives that paper the following on North Carolina politics:

There are now two distinct and well-defined elements of the Democracy in this State, outside of the Alliance Populists. One is in part, and it may be said chiefly represented by Senator M. W. Ransom, an administration anti-free silver Democrat; the other by Senator Z. B. Vance, anti-Cleveland free silver Democrat.

The Populists hope to elect Marion Butler, late president of the North Carolina Alliance, and Weaver, elector-at-large last year, to the United States Senate. Their hopes are principally based on a coalition of the Populist and Republican members to be elected next November.

Gen. Ransom, however, is one of the shrewdest politicians in this country, and so far all attempts to supplant him in the Senate have signally failed.

At present the Republicans, like Brer Rabbit, are layin' low and saying little. With the purpose in view of obtaining a representative statement for the Post of what the Republicans think of this intercurrent strife in the Democratic ranks, your representative waited on ex-Congressman John Nichols, who has more than once been asked to accept the Republican gubernatorial nomination, Mr. Nichols said:

From the many persistent and urgent appeals made by the majority of the State papers to its delinquent subscribers, we are led to believe that the credit system in the newspaper business is getting from bad to worse.
