THE TRIAL OF THE GOOPERS.

Prosecution Working on a Clue Which May Some Suggestions Which May or May No Aid in Establishing a Conspiracy.

After a strenuous recess day on the part of counsel on both sides in the Cooper-Sharp trial for the murder of former United States Senator Edward W. Carmack, only two facts developed. One was that S. J. Bennings, the mysterious witness tor the defense who claimed he saw Senator Carmack revolving the cylinder of a gun, which will not revolve, will be recalled for further cross-examination by the State. The other was the feverish activity of the special good many days. agents or escret police of the prosecution. It developed that this activity was due to Attorney General McCarn's belief that he had discovered a clue to the identity of one of the three mysterious men who would make valuable witnesses for the prosecution.

On the day of Carmack's death -early in the day, three men visited the office of The Nashville Tennessean of which Senator Carmack was editor. Each of the before you set down money paid mack was editor. Each of the before you set down money paid ably met the fate of the Meckmack was editor. Each of the Meckmack was edito men asked at the business office if the clerk could give him Mr. Car- Carry a little book in you pocket ver. mack's address and if he knew about what time the Senator went home each afternoon. Two of the men called in the morning or before noon. The clerks in the counting room did not know where Mr. Carmack lived. But after the second inquiry they secured the information and when the third man appeared after 1 p. m. they gave him the address.

"Our clue is very vague," said Attorney General McCarn tonight, "and I doubt if we will be able to use the information. We know that the inquires were made and can prove this by Tennessean employes. But unless we can identify the men who made them and then further connect them directly with a conspiracy to murder Senator Carmack under our laws we could not offer the testimony-even of The Tennessean employes. We are sparing no pains to identify the men, however, despite the apparent hopelessness of the task. Of course even if we identify the men they will deny the charge and we might not be able to connect them with the defendants."

Counsel for defense were not less active. Old and new witnesses visited their office all day anda number of new subpoenas was issued on their behalf. It became generally knawn today that counsel for the prosecution would not cross-examine either Governor M. R. Patterson or Adjutant General Tulley Brown. At the same time it became just as well known that the attorneys for the State disagreed as to the wisdom of this proceeding. At least two of the attorneys for the prosecution are strong political enemies of the Chief Executive. These favored grilling the Governor. The other, however, objected for two reasons. First, they considered that the Governor's testimony simply corrodorated that of other witnesses as to the famous conferences the day of the tragedy. These conferences the State admits took place. Second ly, of the 12 jurors, nine are Patterson supporters and it was not deemed advisable to attack the Governor on this account.
