W. P. Johnson, of Shiloh township, has presented The Landmark a specimen of "cobless corn" grown on his place last year. The ear-or rather the receptacle that holds the grains of corn—grows on the stalk where the ear usually grows and is shaped somewhat like a head of wheat or a large pine cone. The affair is composed of shucks and the grains of corn are enclosed in little receptacles or grooves of the shucks after the manner of wheat or oats in the head. The entire ear is similar in size to an ear of corn but not so long. Mr. Johnson has not experimented with the corn sufficiently to advise its cultivation. One was sufficient to justify cultivathreshed from the mass of shucks. City tax collector allowed 21 A machine would have to be inper cent flat commission, instead vented for the purpose. The corn
