A Young Man and Tea Gallons of Booze

Friday morning officers having received information that one Garrett would arrive aboard passenger train No. 29, the early train from the west territory to the north, and incidentally were put wise to the fact that the said Garrett had some grips containing fluid of a certain variety. The train arrived all right, so did Garrett and so did the booze. There were four suit cases containing about ten gallons in pint bottles. Garrett was arrested and the booze seized. Garrett was given a hearing in the county court Monday morning, was found guilty and fined $200 and costs. He took an appeal and actually claimed that he was not the owner of the booze and really knew nothing of it.

Another Victim of the Railroad

A. G. James of Mt. Pleasant, who was employed by the Southern Railway to do the concrete work on the double tracking south of Concord, was run over and cut to pieces on the track, in front of County Commissioner Samuels' home, about three miles south of Salisbury by passenger train No. 48, Sunday night. Mr. James was in Concord Sunday evening and later was seen in an automobile coming to Salisbury. It is thought he was standing on the step, the door being closed, or was on the train at some other place, and losing his hold fell under the wheels where his body was cut to pieces. Part of his remains were picked up by the crew of 48 and taken to Concord, later other parts were picked up by the crew on 85, and yet fragments were left scattered along the track and were devoured by buzzards. James was well dressed, had $100 in his pocket, was a widower and leaves three children and a brother, A. N. James, living at Mt. Pleasant, where the funeral and interment took place Monday.
