We notice the organized bankers of this vicinity of the state have recently held a meeting in Statesville. Among other things Mr. R. R. Clark, of the Statesville Landmark, warned them to remember that they are custodians of the people's money. This was mild and timely. No doubt bankers, as well as other business people, can reap some legitimate benefits by organization not only for themselves but also their patrons. Perhaps there were some things discussed that have not been given the public, and as the confidence of the public is a prime necessity in successful banking, they should not only remember that they are custodians, but that their conduct makes or un-makes the confidence they so greatly need. A number of people, owing to the numerous bank failures have been disgusted with their conduct, and have therefore withdrawn their money, and we are inclined to believe this lack of confidence, and the causes creating it, is on the increase. Among other things the bankers discussed was how to increase deposits, especially in the savings department, but just how the bankers can get more from the depositors is not mentioned, which is probably the main idea in organization, an idea, if pressed, will destroy every bank in the country. This idea has already reached the point, in some communities, where the little depositor is to all intents and purposes forced to loan the bank $100.00 without interest for what they, the banks, designate as service, and perhaps it is worth that, but as it is done without consulting the depositor, many of them feel that it is arbitrary and unjust, which certainly is no aid in the building of confidence. Another scheme is that in which some one writes a check without sufficient funds to take care of it, a check of accommodation perhaps, but innocent or otherwise, if such a check goes first to a bank in which the drawer has no account, he is taxed 50 cents, that is he is deprived of 50 cents without his agreeing to such an arrangement. This may help to stop the bad check nuisance, but some want to know when the banks took over the enforcement of the law of the land to their financial betterment and to the depositors injury? And what is worse most people figure that if a bank will hold you up for 50 cents, by way of self-made rules, what is there to prevent it holding up one for any greater amount? Or are those who deliberately take your money without your consent any better than any other class of hold-up men? In short, if any one takes 50 cents out of your bank account, under rule and regulations formulated by himself, what is there to prevent taking 50 cents out of your pocket? and further, are such people desirable custodians of your money? Of course no rightly disposed person will lend comfort to those who habitually overdraw their accounts, and the fellow who gives a worthless check, obtaining cash or goods thereby, is a criminal, and as such should be properly dealt with by the proper authorities. Another injustice is where the little fellow, for the lack of ten cents to cover his check, is made the butt of this rule while the more fortunate, who overdrafts perhaps hundreds, "gets by" without any charge. All of which, without a more prolonged discussion, is not conducive to any great amount of confidence in banks, for those who justify themselves in the taking of money in small amounts will soon be purloining larger amounts. Bristol, Va.—"I was just about down in bed and so weak I was past going," writes Mrs. Jennie Goodman, of 118 Portsmouth Avenue, this city. Mrs. Goodman says her family was very uneasy about her condition, as she seemed so weak and thin. "I ached all over," she explains, "and my back and sides hurt most of the time. "I dragged around, and did not see a day of good health. "I went to call on one of my neighbors, and she remarked about my looking so bad. She told me to get a bottle of Cardui and take it. Next Saturday night, my husband brought it home to me. "Before I had taken Cardui a week, I was feeling much better. I continued taking it for awhile, as my health kept on improving. "I gained in weight, and soon was feeling like a new person. Since then I have taken Cardui several times, and it has always done me good. I can recommend it to others." King Cotton has greatly extended his dominions in the industrial field in recent years and his scouts are constantly looking for new regions to conquer, says the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The fiber has ten thousand uses and more are being discovered every year. These new uses and the extension of old uses have maintained or increased per capita consumption of cotton in spite of the reduced dimensions of women's dresses and competition from other textiles.

Formerly, cotton was used almost entirely for clothing, but other uses are taking an increasing share of the crop. Among the many industrial outlets are automobile tires, auto bodies, cotton bagging and baling, airplane cloths, rubber goods, artificial leather, awnings, wall coverings, traffic markers, power belting, electrical insulators, cleavage and binder cloths in road construction, gears, truck wheels, and other machinery parts.

The production in the United States requires about 500,000 bales of cotton annually. In 1927, 219,000,000 pounds of cotton fabrics were used in the production, according to the Rubber Association of America. Cotton is used also by the auto industry for upholstery, tops, curtains, carpets, tire covers, padding, linings, electrical insulation, rubber tubing, and brake bands. All these uses were relatively unimportant twenty years ago.

Cotton bags used in the wholesale grocery trade for sugar, flour, salt, coffee, potatoes, and similar commodities require about 200,000 bales of raw cotton and waste every year. The cement industry consumes cotton bags equivalent to about 45,000 bales, the bakery trade, 20,000 bales, and the fertilizer industry, 4,000 bales. Bags for handling coal, mail and money also take small amounts. It is estimated that if cotton bags were used for packaging all commodities to which they are adapted in the wholesale grocery trade alone, about 600,000 bales of raw cotton and waste would be required annually.

If cotton cloth were used as a bale covering on 60 per cent of the average cotton crop, about 120,000 bales would be required for bagging. It is estimated that the withdrawal of this amount, chiefly of low grades, from the supply would raise the seasonal average price of cotton by about 1/4 cent a pound, or $1.25 a bale. This would be about enough to pay for the covering, so that producers in the aggregate would, in effect, get their bagging without cost. Tests have shown that cotton has advantages over jute bagging through making a neater package, reducing dead weight and lessening waste in removing from the bale, but jute coverings cost less except in years of extremely low cotton prices. Attempts are being made to produce a light cotton bagging that can be sold in competition with jute.

Cotton textiles are more extensively used in aviation than any other fabric and this use is growing rapidly. Its lightness, strength, durability under vibration, ease of repair and low cost make it the best textile for this purpose. The outer covering of the Graf Zeppelin contained 20,000 square yards of cotton cloth and 40,000 square yards were used in its 30 gas cells.

Cotton manufacturers have found it possible to increase the popularity of cotton clothing through more attention to design, harmonizing patterns with style tendencies, faster colors and using competitive fibers with cotton. As a result of these efforts, cotton dresses are in greater vogue at present than for several years.

The use of 108-inch bed sheets rather than the 90-inch length sometimes sold is a means of extending the use of cotton in an old and standard product, and opens up an additional outlet for 30,000,000 square yards of wide sheeting annually. Awning manufacturers have launched a three-year campaign to increase the use of their product and estimate the possible gain in their market at 25,000,000 square yards annually. The use of cotton traffic markers in place of paint on city streets is estimated to require 5,000,000 square yards of cotton fabric a year. Cloth to make a cleavage plane in cement roads will take about 5,000,000 square yards this year and its use as a binder in putting an asphalt surface on ordinary roads opens up an immense market. Every mile of such road would use a minimum of 3,520 square yards of fabric.

The United States Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, and the Cotton Textile Institute are co-operating in a survey of the utilization of cotton, trying to find in what industries it is used and where its use may be extended. They have found cotton being used in 150 different ways on the farm, aside from the household. Household uses, aside from clothing, number over 100. Railroads use cotton in over 40 different ways. Building trades make considerable use of cotton. Modern steamboats use much more cotton goods than sailing vessels.

The development of new uses and the extension of old uses are essential to sustained progress of the cotton industry from the standpoint of both cotton producers and manufacturers, the Foundation asserts. Efforts in this direction deserve warm support.

We visited at the Spencer shops Saturday, also visited the Mayor of Spencer and his wife, took dinner with them. He has the prettiest little wife you ever did see.

At Spencer we came across a barber shop. The man in the chair was B. B. Brown. The barber's name was Wyatt, shaving him.

We went to Salisbury to attend the funeral of our life-long friend, Baldy Boyden, one of the civil war veterans. There were more flowers placed over and around his grave than we ever saw before. It was one time. A large crowd attended the services.
