

Defer Advertising Land For Taxes

WEEK'S DELAY IS GRANTED BY COMMISSIONERS

Further Postponement Would Affect Financial Standing Of County, Board Is Advised.

The county commissioners Thursday delayed the advertising of land for delinquent taxes until next week.

All of the commissioners are opposed to the advertisement and sale of land for taxes at the present time and hope a delay is possible. However, O. L. Linn, temporary chairman, and J. E. Haynes, auditor, were advised in Raleigh Wednesday by the local government commission and other state officials that advertisements must begin next week in order that a sale can be had on the first Monday in June.

Another meeting of the board will be held next week to definitely decide the matter.

State officials pointed out to Commissioner Linn and Auditor Haynes that postponement more than a week would be in violation of the law and would probably affect the financial standing of the several counties in the state. Should the statutes be disregarded, it was also stated, some difficulty in the sale of bonds might be encountered in the future.

Because of the depression and the present financial crisis, the commissioners hoped that the advertisement and subsequent sale of land for taxes could be indefinitely postponed.

Grow A Pasture Or Quit Dairying

The most economical way to feed dairy cows is to have a good pasture and supplement the grazing with the proper grain and roughage mixtures. This is the natural way to feed cows and to produce milk at a profit. Either have a pasture or quit dairying.

In this way does A. C. Kimrey, dairy extension specialist at State College, stress the value of having a plentiful supply of nutritious grazing for milk producing cows. Dairymen have attempted from time to time to keep cows in unnatural conditions. But the wise dairyman assists nature by supplying an abundance of luxuriant and tender grass during as many months of the year as possible.

17-Year Locusts Appear Here Soon; Visit Is Explained

North Carolinians in May and June will be able to observe one of the most phenomenal happenings in the insect world when the 17-year locust makes its periodical appearance, Dr. Z. P. Metcalf, of N. C. State college, said.

The sound of unusually loud, gusty and insistent singing of thousands of insects in the woods will herald the emergence of the insects.

This month, Dr. Metcalf said, locusts or cicadas will appear in the trees

TONGUE HAS TWO COLORS

Albemarle—Here's something backed up by the word of Dr. J. A. Allen of New London, as well as by several Albemarle residents who have made special trips of inspection. It's a calf having a tongue that is perfectly normal in every respect, save that one half of it is black as it is possible for anything to be, while the other half is almost pure white. This unusual-tongued calf was born a few days ago in the herd owned by Dr. Allen at New London.

Most of us think we have several "inalienable rights" which we have never been allowed to exercise.

of this state from eggs which were laid in the limbs of forest trees in 1915. In 1915 the eggs hatched into very tiny grubs, which crawled into the soil and attached themselves to the roots of trees where they have been living since. Fully grown, the locusts will emerge from the ground in countless thousands within the next two months.

Careful records kept since the earliest days of North Carolina history record the regular visitations of the 17-year locusts. There is also a species of 13-year cicada and there are nine broods of the 17-year variety appearing in this state in different years. The brood due to emerge this year, however, is the most regular and the largest listed.

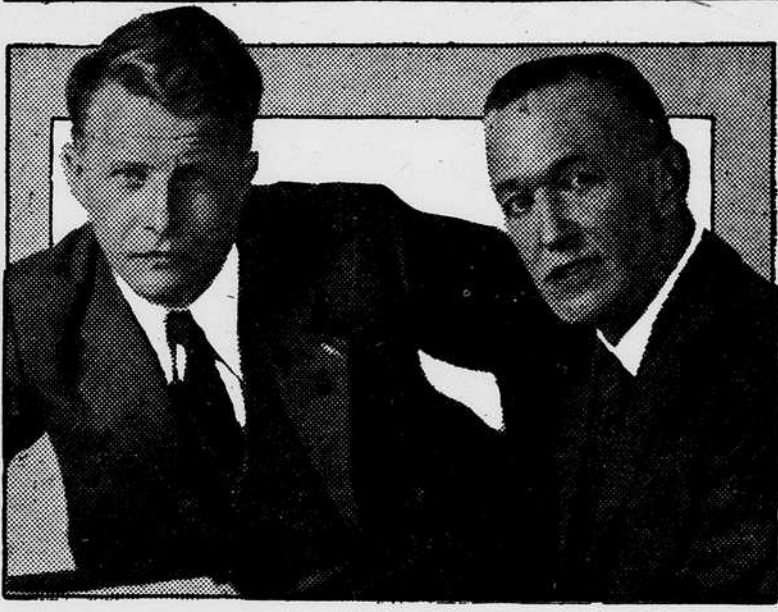

No great damage will be done by the insects, Dr. Metcalf said.

The locusts cannot sting or injure people. The principal damage they do is to lay eggs in the terminal branches of forest trees.

Culinary Jingles by Virginia Gibson

I've learned a way to slenderize— You simply cannot beat it, And for the gal who needs most I gladly will repeat it: Cook what you will—but always let The other fellow eat it!

HARD-HEARTED as it may sound, the woman who wants to keep slender is either going to have to deprive her family of the good things they want and are entitled to, or she is going to have to sit by and watch them eat the goodies she cooks. This latter plan certainly takes will-power but a slimmer figure is the reward, and it is not so hard once one makes up her mind. And there are still plenty of good things one may eat while the program is on.

For instance, a juicy steak, eaten with salad, vegetables and dry toast two or three times a week, will contract rather than expand the feminine waist-line, according to one of the world's foremost authorities on beauty, Mme. Helena Rubinstein, and goodness knows every woman wants a slim waistline these days.

Here are four rules for a healthful yet slenderizing diet which Mme. Rubinstein offers:

1. Relax and rest digestive organs by going on a one-food diet of orange juice or baked potatoes or grapes for 3 or 4 days every 6 or 7 weeks.
2. Eat three meals a day if you are accustomed to that many, but abstain from over-generous or second helpings.
3. Drink plenty of water—at least 10 glasses a day, but never with meals.
4. Reduce starches, sugars, and fats in your diet and introduce increased quantities of fruits and vegetables.

Do you think you can stick to these?

Here is a suggested luncheon dish that is satisfying and appetizing but not weight-accumulating: Chop one eating apple, leaving on the skin, and one stalk of celery. Season. Mix with two tablespoons full of mayonnaise made with mineral oil, instead of olive or vegetable oil, and lemon juice instead of vinegar. Sprinkle half a tablespoonful of chopped nuts over the top and serve on lettuce. Serve with rye crisp or wheat-biscuits.

If you must have coffee, learn to drink it without cream or sugar.
