The Carolina Watchman was born.

Court was held in the courthouse on the square (Innes and Main streets.)

The jail was located corner Main and Liberty streets, (then Corbin and Water) where Rouzer Motor Co., is now located.

John Giles was clerk of court for Rowan County.

The population of Rowan County was about the same as Salisbury has at the present time.

Feilding Slater was sheriff of Rowan County.

Benjamin Harrison was born.

Andrew Jackson, former law student of Salisbury was president of the United States, Harvard University conferred upon Pres. Jackson degree of L. L. D. in 1833.

Richmond M. Pearson represented Rowan County in the house of commons, then soon after was elected judge of the Superior court and later judge of the Supreme court.

The General Assembly of North Carolina authorized the town commissioners of Salisbury to organize a fire company not to exceed fifty men. The man would be subject to militia duty but not subject to petty musters. The commissioners were to have power to fix fines for neglect of duty. These commissioners also were to prescribe what streets were to be kept open and to fix fines on overseers for neglect to have same worked by citizens.

Abraham Lincoln wrote the following upon the subject of education: Not presuming to dictate any plan or system, respecting it, I view it as the most important subject that we, as a people, can be engaged in. That every man may receive at least a moderate education and thereby be able to read the histories of his own and other countries, by which he may duly appreciate the value of our free institutions.

Just one hundred years ago, Maxwell Chambers, James J. Long, John Pool, George Vogler, John Giles and Moses Brown Sr. were appointed commissioners to draft and prepare plans for a new jail for Rowan County in Salisbury. They were to select some other site which would be better suited for the same. The contract was let to Samuel Lemly. (Other information regarding jails and courthouses in Salisbury will appear in an early issue.)

James Huie and John Scott formed a copartnership in Salisbury to carry on a business of trading in slaves. The capital of the company was twelve thousand dollars and the intention of the company was to trade in the Louisiana slave market.

The honorable Burton Craig, Sr., has begun to practice law in Salisbury and other courts. (It is be-

The American people are a little too over-enthusiastic, sometimes a little too previous, in welcoming every latest flash-in-the-pan, thinks Rose Franken, the New York housewife, who is the author of the Broadway smash hit, "Another Language." The fact that nine months ago the author's only claim to fame was the fact that she the wife of Dr. Sigmund Franken, a well-known oral surgeon, has not changed her perspective since she finds herself Broadway's newest celebrity.

When she hears people raving about the latest "finds" of the hour, she just can't help thinking about "what happens to all the beautiful babies."

Mrs. Franken, a slender young woman in her thirties, with soft hazel eyes, was calm and reflective.

She seems to feel that there is a decided tendency to oversell in America, to overbuild everything from personality to plays. She thinks she has written a sincere, real little play, which was sort of a by product of her own life and happiness, not in any autobiographical sense, but in the sense that she found her life so happy, satisfying and overflowing with the fundamentals of reality that she felt a need to express these swift charging currents of activity in writing.

She has three fine sons, aged 13, 10 and 3, and a successful and interesting husband, and a fine home on Central Park overlooking the lake. She could not digest her lump of bliss. She must share it and the outlet, the method of distribution, she soon discovered was through medium of the typewriter, a portable one, belonging to her husband.

"I wrote because I was happy. I felt a desire to share an experience with others, but I did not write because I wanted to be a success. I have little faith in success as such," she smiled. "I first wrote short stories and novels. Another Language I wrote first as a short story. It is my opinion that a good short story has within it the makings of a play. There is a definite technique, a dramatic contour, to a well written short story. This is not true of a novel."

Mrs. Franken, then explained that although her play has been described as the housewife's maiden literary effort, it is not quite so. It is her first piece of writing which was to win overnight acclaim, the first to win acclaim of any kind.
