May Sell Others' Excess

Growers of flue-cured tobacco in North Carolina who have signed adjustment contracts with the government and whose production in 1934 is less than their allotment, may, if they care to do so, sell the fllue-cured tobacco grown by other contracting growers whose production exceeds their allotment.

"This administrative ruling was signed by Secretary Wallace last week," says E. Y. Floyd of State College, in charge of the tobacco program in this state. "The decision was made when it was learned that in some sections, the production will be well below the quantity of tobacco allotted. Reports as to crop conditions from all sections indicate that the total producion of contracting growers will be approximately 50 million pounds below 80 percent of the base production which will be the quantity allotted to contracting growers and is the quantity for which tax-payment warrants could be issued. The most recent estimate of the crop is 526 millions pounds."

Mr. Floyd points out any arrangements made between contracting growers to utilize allotment cards other than their own for selling tobacco is purely a private transaction. Contracting growers who produce in excess of their allotment will not be permitted to market this excess tobacco and pay the tax provided under the Kerr-Smith Tobacco Control Act but may arrange to sell this tobacco under another contracting grower's allotment card.

The non-contracting growers, unlike contracting producers, may sell tobacco produced in excess of any allotment given them, if they pay the tax of 25 percent of the market value as provided in the Kerr-Smith Act. They will not, however, be permitted to sell tobacco under the marketing card of a contracting grower, Floyd

This indication that post-repeal bootleggers were scorning the $5 a-gallon customs duty "saved" by smuggling manufactured liquors, as well as the domestic taxes dodged, in favor of the even larger profits realized by making their own beverages from smuggled alcohol was held to throw a new light on the disagreement between the Treasury and the Federal Alcohol Control Administration over the best way of combating the illicit liquor traffic.

Afternoon tea is said to give people energy, and the noise at the teas indicate that it energizes penple's tongues anyway.

The cattle have had to be moved out of the drought areas, but it is fortunate that the goats can still live on tin cans.
