Skimping On Feed Is False Economy

A mistaken sense of economy frequently induces poultrymen to feed their hens sparingly during the moulting period.

But attempts to save feed at this time will cost the poultrymen in the long run, warns Roy S. Dearstynne extension poultry specialist at State College.

When birds are fed scratch feed alone or only a limited amount of mash, he pointed out, the moulting period is prolonged and they are unable to put on the necessary weight to carry them through the next laying season.

The result is a drop in egg production that more than offsets the money saved by skimping on feed, Dearstynne explained.

Moulting birds have passed through a heavy laying period which taxed their vitality and reduced their body weight. They are also losing feathers which must be replaced.

The birds need a balanced diet with plenty of protein to build up their muscular and glandular tissue and to grow new feathers. A balanced mash and a liberal ration of moulting birds not in lay. This will scratch feed should be before the insure better health during the laying year.

Since most poultry flocks are more or less infested with intestinal parasites, it is advisable to deworm

Just How Big Is The Telephone Company

THE Southern Bell Company is only as big as the people of North Carolina and the South have required it to be.

The more than three million people of this great State would not be satisfied with or be properly served by a company of less size, incapable of furnishing the high type of dependable, nation-wide service now required.

The telephone service needs of the people of North Carolina are large and it necessarily requires a large institution to do this big job. Nearly 17,000,000 local and long distance calls are made monthly in North Carolina, and the responsibility for the continuous operation of a service of such importance is large.

To operate, maintain and expand this intricate system requires a small army of more than 1,400 workers, whose annual payroll is $1,500,000.

Because of its size the telephone industry is also one of the largest contributors to the support of the State and its subdivisions by the payment of taxes. Its total tax bill in North Carolina for 1934 amounted to more than $660,000.

The telephone company of necessity is also a large user of raw materials, and spends large sums of money in North Carolina for the products of the State.

North Carolina is a big, important State, requiring a telephone company large enough to insure continuous, adequate and dependable telephone service—a service not limited by State lines, but world-wide in its scope.

A telephone company smaller in size and resources could not render such a service and would not be capable of serving the people of North Carolina satisfactorily.
