The Duke of Wellington and our Second War with Great Britain.

During the first occupation of Paris by the allies in 1814, Lord Wellington wrote many important letters to the Home Government, part of one of which, addressed to Lord Liverpool, refers to the proposal then made to send him to America:

"I have already told you and Lord Bathurst that I feel no objection to going to America, though I don't promise to myself much success there. I believe there are troops enough there for the defence of Canada forever, and even for the accomplishment of any reasonable offensive plan that could be formed from the Canadian frontier. I am quite sure that all the American armies of which I have ever read would not beat out of a field of battle the troops that went from Bordenax last summer, if common precautions and care were taken of them.

"That which appears to me to be wanting in America is not a general, or general officers and troops, but a naval superiority on the lakes; till that superiority is acquired, it is impossible, according to my notion, to maintain an army in such a situation as to keep an enemy out of the whole frontier, much less to make any conquest from the enemy, which, with those superior means, might, with reasonable hopes of success, be undertaken. I may be wrong in this opinion, but I think the whole history of the war proves its truth; and I suspect that you will find that Prevost will justify his misfortunes, (which, by-the-by, I am quite certain are not what the Americans have represented them to be,) by stating that the navy were defeated; and even if he had taken Fort Moresu, he must have retired.

"The question is, whether we can obtain this naval superiority on the lakes. If we cannot, I shall do you but little good in America, and I shall go there only to prove the truth of Prevost's defence, and to sign a peace which might as well be signed now. There will, always, however, remain this advantage, the confidence which I have acquired will reconcile both the army and people of England to terms of which they would not now approve.

"In regard to your present negotiations, I confess that I think you have no right, from the state of the war, to demand any concession of territory from America. Considering everything, it is my opinion that the war has been a most successful one, and highly honorable to the British arms; but, from particular circumstances, such as the want of naval superiority on the lakes, you have not been able to carry it into the enemy's territory, notwithstanding your military success and now unbounded military superiority, and have not even cleared your own territory of the enemy on the point of attack. You cannot, on any principle of equality in negotiation, claim a cession of territory, excepting in exchange for other advantages which you have in your power."

CONJUGAL AFFECTION OF A JUROR.—At St. Louis, during a murder trial, one of the jurors, an adjournment, went home, instead of going to the jury room. The Court the next morning took him to task for his conduct, when he replied that he had been a married man for twelve years, and had never been away from his wife one night in the whole of that time, and that he found it utterly impossible to be absent from her. The judge fined the delinquent $50 for his conjugal affection, which fine was afterwards commuted to three days' imprisonment in jail.
