WHOLE NUMBER 573.

"I am a Lost Man !"

The newspapers inform us that these were the last words of Bogeaud, Marshal of Prance, and Duke of Isly When he uttered them, he was just closing a brilliant, many would say, a useful life. He had led vast armies to battle. He had governed extensive States. He had been conspicuous in the councils of nations. The President of France made anxious visits to his death-chamber. The stern Cavaignac wept as he looked upon the dissolving frame of his old comrade; and the Convention was profoundly affected when the news of his death was announced, "With all this accumulation of honor he was, by his own confession, " a lost man." How mournful the contrast between the glory of his life and the deep gloom of its close !

From the same source we learn that Bugeaud had a pious mother. In the history of his eventful life, this seems to have been the only quarter in which good influence was exerted upon his heart. His mother's voice alone warned him of his danger and spoke to him of eternity ; all others influences led him astray. without lodgings. Some of her best rooms will be reserved In the camp he heard of God only in blasphemy. In civil life he saw nothing but a desperate struggle for earthly place and power. In the saloons of Paris he heard wit mocking, and philosophy denouncing the religion of youth. The quiet voice that had warned him, and prayed with him, was, alas for him ? overborne and lost in the midst of these babbling voices of the world.

> In the hour of death, however, these voices die away and are forgotten. The acclamations of a world could not have made the failing pulse of Bugeaud heat faster. Other tones were in his ears ; the accents we will not listen to when they admonish us, we are often forced to listen to when they accuse. The dying moments are often the time of resurrections for abused privileges and neglected gifts. They "stalk forth from the burial place of memory," to foreshadow our toom. and convince us of its undeniable justice.

> Thus we explain that fearful expression that fell from the dying warrior. He heeded a voice which he had long neglected and forgotten. Across the waste of years, through the storm of batt'e, it comes clear and distinct upon his falling ear. It asks for the fruit of early counsel; it seeks for the result of pious care and zeal. One comprehensive glance over his life satisfies the man that he was wasted it. His own conscience condemn him. In this he knows that he but anticipates the sentence of God, and he sinks into death, " a lost man."

The lessson of this sad incident is easily read. It is only another instance of the case with which carelessness can turn our best blessings into curses. A mothtimable gifts
