

Army Correspondence of the Charleston Courier. The Second Battle of Manassas. [CONCLUDED] THE FIELD AFTER THE BATTLE. This is a portion of the history of the day which was not fully described. But if the reader can imagine himself looking across the country in the direction from which we advanced, over the gullies, ravines and valleys which divide the opposite hills, he will see a dead and unadorned landscape as far as the eye could reach. The woods are like a sea of white. It has been covered by a layer of white ash or a fine fall of them. The ground is everywhere a level of white. The trees are thick upon the slopes and summit where their habitations were planned, and the infantry were drawn up as supporters in many instances as many as eighty or ninety deep, making the ranks white with the double ranks. It is one of the singular coincidences of this strange battle, that God's brigade encountered on Saturday precisely the same troops whom they met at Gaines Mill in the latter before Richmond. The horses, the caissons, the fellows in red breeches, the blue and black caps and blue embroidered jackets, and as if the companies were moved down, in front of the Hampton Legion, a 5th Georgia, I counted every one of the dead, as if they were not dead, but as if they were only the double ranks. It was a sight to see in every attitude, and growing in every imaginable form.

ment. We are counting on a speedy accession of at least fifteen thousand men from the other side of the Potomac. What army in the history of the world has ever moved. Gen. Kearney has certainly been killed and his body sent to the Yankee lines. [CONCLUDED] THE FIELD AFTER THE BATTLE. This is a portion of the history of the day which was not fully described. REPOSE.—Physical repose, indeed, is one of the great and ever-recurring necessities of our nature, and it is strange to reflect how very much of the outward happiness of life is to be traced to it. When the physical energies have been tasked to the utmost, there is, as we know, a strange pleasure attached to the mere cessation of toil. How sweet and soothing the sensation of rest that steals over the bodily frame when the strained muscle is relaxed, and the nerves are unstrung, and the will flings loose the reins of control over the active powers, and every limb and joint and fibre are bathed in repose! Who has not often felt the luxury of listlessness, the pleasing pain of languor in the quiet evening hours that succeed to a day of hard fatiguing work, when the very order of nature—her fading light, and gathering stillness, and tranquil solemnity of aspect—seem to minister to the instinct of repose which all living creatures feel? And then how manifold the benefits conferred on man by God's gift of sleep! How strangely potent the cordial which it pours into the exhausted frame, and from which the worn powers daily drink in new strength and elasticity! What a boon to many the mere bliss of unconsciousness, the periodic escape from self, the flight from toil and care and weariness, when we cross the bridge that separates the wakeful working world from the shadowy world of dreams! Surely not unworthy of infinite beneficence is that gift of which it is written, "He giveth His beloved sleep."

THIS combination of medicines was first prepared by the proprietor in 1842, when he was recommended by three eminent physicians in an urban city, as an advanced stage of Consumption. These Pills cured him. He is now over seventy years of age and in discharge of active professional duties. These Pills effect a cure in others a severe demand for 250,000 pills, and he was compelled to desist from supplying the great world. They are not recommended by the proprietor as good for all diseases, but only for such as arise from DISORDERS OF THE LIVER. Many persons have testified to their good effects in Cholera, and Fevers, Biliousness, Pneumonia, Typhoid, &c. &c. Head the following: S. J.
