THE ECCENTRIC NABOB.

Some two or three miles from the little town of Aylesbury, England, there once lived three cousins, of the family name of Barrett. They were all married and settled on farms, within a few miles of each other...

One day the three families were thrown into great commotion by each of them receiving a letter which contained, besides date and signature, only these words: "I am rich. Fools here call me a nabob. I would not give such a title to a cat. No matter I shall live always--and when I die my property must go to somebody. I am coming to England to find an heir. I shall come and see you, and hope you will please me. I hope you are not troubled with beggars. I do not like to see them about."

One dark, rainy night, about three weeks after the receipt of these letters by the cousins, the family of Moses Barrett was thrown into a great state of excitement by the appearance at the door of two men in livery, who announced themselves as the want couriers of his excellency, Joshua Barrett, of India, who would claim their hospitality for the night. Early in the morning the messengers put spurs to the horses and dashed away, without giving the astonished listeners time to ask even a single question.

Now Moses Barrett was a hunk, his wife shrewd, and his three children chips of the two blocks, but all undertook to change their natures for the time--or rather, to be ready to change them on the appearance of the rich uncle--for what was the use of acting with the certain down.

"Now, Mose, you stinky old brute," said his wife, "if you know on which side your bread's buttered, it's to be hoped you'll have some chickens killed for his excellency's supper, which is more'n you did for Christmas, and some of that wine fetched up that you've in the cellar since the year one, and a fire made in the best room, that hasn't been there this ten years; and all our nice clothes put on--that ain't much--for you'd never allow us nothing decent to wear."

"And it is to be hoped, old woman," retorted the angry husband, "that you'll soften down that screeching voice of yours, and wait your wrinkles into smiles, and that'll be something I've never seen since the first week of our marriage."

Great activity was displayed by all in getting ready to give the rich uncle the best reception possible, and all rejoiced, as much as such a hopeful family could rejoice, that they would be the first to receive a visit from him--hoping, of course, that they might thus forestall the other relations in his good graces. It would have been a strange way for any other person to have made his first visit; but then, they knew the uncle was very eccentric, and his being so very wealthy made it all right in their eyes. He might come and stand on his head, provided he paid for his antics.

In the midst of their hurried preparations, there appeared at the door of an old, feeble looking, white-haired man, thinny clad, and with his soaked garments clinging to his shriveled form.

"Will you be kind enough, good people," he said, "to give me something to eat, and a place to sleep to-night?" "We've got nothing to spare! and if we had, we don't harbor beggars!" replied the master of the house, in a coarse, brutal tone.

"But I'm old, and feeble, and hungry, and wet, and tired," said the aged applicant, in a pleading tone, "and if you drive me away, I may perish."

"It isn't convenient for us to keep you to-night," said the master of the house, in a mild, dignified tone. "Besides, we don't like to encourage beggars. If you are poor and not able to work, the parish where you belong is bound to support you. No one need starve in this country, which the Lord, blessed be His name, has so bountifully provided for. I trust I am not wanting in charity--as an humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, I hope I am not--but what with taxes for the support of the government and the poor, donations to benevolent societies and heathen missions, it is as much as I can do to live and give my family a respectable maintenance. Now, my friend, if you are poor, and not able to work, (though I don't see why you may not work as well as travel, you had better throw yourself on the parish where you belong.)"

"But I am tired, wet and hungry," said the old man, "and all the parishes in the world can't do me any good to-night."

"But you should have thought of that before you left home," now chimed in the good housewife, with a sanctified air. "It is sinful to tempt the Lord, as it is called; and whoever sins must expect punishment. I never go away without providing for the journey, and, of course, I don't expect anybody to feed and shelter me for nothing. It is a sin, too, to be idle when one is able to work, and it is against my principle, as a true Christian, to encourage any one in sinning."

"Then, I suppose, I'm to understand that you refuse me both food and lodging," said the old man.

"As to food," said the pious dame, glancing at her husband, "if you are very hungry, I suppose we can do something in that way; but lodging is out of the question--for two mounted couriers have been here to say that very rich uncle of yours from India will be here very soon--and he wrote some time ago, that he didn't like to have beggars about where he was, and we wouldn't like to offend him. True, we hardly expect he will come to-night; but, then, he might, you know, and we wouldn't like to run any risks."

"Well, then," said the old man with a sigh, "I'll take the food, if you please, and go on, even if I perish."

"Put your trust in the Lord, my friend, put your trust in the Lord!" said Stephen Barrett, solemnly.

"Yes," echoed his wife, "put your trust in the Lord!--that is what we do when in trouble. Sarah Jane, go down in the cellar and bring up a couple of those cold potatoes for this old man--they are very good eating when one is hungry--I like them myself. Yes, put your trust in the Lord! and don't leave home again without means. The good-by, while I think of it," added the good woman, laying down a cap-trill, on which she had been busily at work while talking, and took up with a bright twinkle of her eyes, "I do believe you can get a good night's lodging at Harry Barrett's, who lives only half a mile from here, on the road south. He's a great hand for taking in strangers."

She looked at her husband, and both smiled knowingly, for both were thinking that in case the rich uncle should find the beggar there, it might increase Stephen Barrett's chances of being the fortunate heir.

Sarah Jane now returned and handed the old man two little cold potatoes. He took them, turned them slowly over, examined them on all sides, and murmured: "They have eyes--but can they see? I think not--for if they could they'd blush red, instead of keeping such a dark color. Then glancing slowly around the neat, tidy, cheerful room, taking in three prime girls and their pious parents, he quickly tossed the potatoes into the lap of the astonished mistress, saying as he did so, "I beg your pardon, ma'am, but I did not intend to rob you."

"Oh, you sinful, wicked, old creature!" exclaimed the good dame, in holy horror, as the disgraced old man turned and went out and shut the door with a slam.

Less than half an hour the unfortunate wayfarer was trying his chances at the house of Henry Barrett.

bluntly. "You won't leave this house to-night, for all the uncles that all the Indies can turn out! Sit down again, sir, sit down and make yourself at home! I know the duty of a man who has faith in God, and I'm going to do it. What is his money to me? I can't eat it, nor drink it, nor wear it, nor carry it into the other world; and I'm sure it wouldn't bring me any happiness that I don't now enjoy, and I know it couldn't ever compensate me for one settling money as has chosen--I'll arrange my conscience to suit myself."

"God bless you!" murmured the old man, in a trembling voice, and bowing his head upon his hands, he wept in silence.

He remained at that hospitable house during the night, and was entertained like an honored guest. The next day being fair, he took his leave; as he was about to depart, Harry Barrett put a crown into his hand, saying: "Take it, my friend, and not a word! I don't know who you are, and I've not felt it my duty to inquire; but this I know--from your appearance, manners, and language--that you are not a common beggar, and that you have seen better days, which I sincerely hope you may see again. It's as much as my circumstances will justify, and it may, perhaps, serve to keep you from starving some night, or sleeping by the wayside."

"God will repay you!" said the old man, solemnly; and he walked slowly away, wiping the tears from his eyes.

He has already named Harry Barrett, placing his hand upon his heart, "I have it here--principal and interest."

Long, and in vain, did the selfish families of Moses and Stephen Barrett look for the appearance of their rich uncle from India in a carriage and four, and great was their disappointment and vexation thereat. Then came the intelligence that he was sick in London. Next came the news that he was dead, and had left a will. What an intense desire to know the contents of that will! What a wild, furious excitement when its contents became known!

To Moses Barrett he devised one pound to buy a coffin for the dog that his precious son had threatened to set on a beggar. To Stephen Barrett he had bequeathed one pound three pence--the pound to be devoted to the parish poor--the three pence to buy cold potatoes for beggars, with the hope that he and his pious family would put their trust in the Lord.

To Henry Barrett, and his heirs forever, he had bequeathed all the remainder of his vast wealth, some half a million pounds sterling, with a hope that he and they would sometimes recall with pleasure the visit of the old, white-haired man they had once so kindly entertained.

The old beggar of that dark, rainy night, was no other than Joshua Barrett himself!

THE LADIES' DEPOSITORY. IN VIEW OF THE CONTINUED AND INCREASED destitution and want in our country, and the number of ladies of Baltimore who have formed themselves into an Association, under the name of "THE LADIES' DEPOSITORY."

The object is to receive needle and other work and to dispose of it solely for the benefit of the poor. The Association will also be taken at the Depository for any kind of work, so as to provide employment for those who have not the necessary materials.

As considerable expense will be incurred in providing a place of business and the requisite assistants, and as the enterprise cannot of course be self-supporting, the Association must depend upon the contributions of its friends. The annual subscription has been fixed at $5, and all who are favorably disposed are earnestly requested to give their prompt and liberal aid, by donations or otherwise, to help those who are doing their utmost to help themselves.
