A LAWYER'S ADVENTURE.

About four years ago, while I was practicing law in Illinois, on a pretty large circuit, I was called on one day in my office by a very pretty woman, who, not without tears, told me that her husband had been arrested for horse stealing. She wished to retain me for the defence. I asked her why she did not go to Judge R———an sion.

I asked her to tell me the whole truth of the matter, and if it was true that her husband did belong to such a band.

"Ah, sir," said she, "a better man at them."

"Beware—they are members of the gang. They mean to rob and murder you.

Leave soon, and I will manage to detain them."

I did not feel comfortable just then, but itself than my George never lived, but he ikes cards and drink, and I am afraid they made him do what he never would have lose if he had not drank. I fear it can be proved that he had the horse; he didn't teal it; another stole it and passed it to night?" asked one of the men; "we are

I didn't like the case. I knew there was a great dislike to the gang located where she named, and feared to risk the case before a jury. She seemed to observe my intention to refuse the case, and bursted into

The prosecution opened very bitterly, and inveigned against thieves and counterfeiten, who had made the land a terror to strangers and travelers, and who had robod overy farmer in the region of his finest horses. It introduced witnesses, and it proved all and more than I feared it would. The time came for me to rise for the defence. Witnesses, I had none. But I had to mike an effort, only hoping so to interest the jury as to secure a recommendation to gubernatorial elemency and a light sentence.

So I painted his picture. A young man entering into life, wedded to an angel; beautiful in person, possessing every noble attribute. Temptation lay before and around him. He kept a tavern. There were many guests; it was not for him to inquire their business; they dressed well, made large bills and paid promptly. At an unguarded hour, when he was insane with liquor, they urged upon him; he desired from the path of rectitude. The lamon alsohol reigned in his brain, and if he first offence. Mercy pleaded for another channels to make and farm the path of rectitude. The lamon alsohol reigned in his brain, and if he first offence to mave him from rain.

The Judge charged according to law and evidence, but evidently leaned on the side of mercy. The jury found a verdict of guilty, but unanimously recommended the prisoner to the mercy of the court. My client was sentenced to the shortest imprisonment the court was empowered to give, and both jury and court signed a petition to the Governor for an unconditional pardon, which has since been kindly granted, but not before the following interesting incident occurred:

Some three months after this, I received an account for collection from a wholesale house in New York. The parties to collect from were hard ones; but they had property, and before they had an idea of the trap laid, I had the property, which they were about to assign, before they broke, under attachment. I had gone along ten or twelve miles, when I noticed a splendid team of horses attached to a light wagon, in which were seated four men, evidently of the high-strung order. They swept past me as if to show me how easily they could do it.—

They shortened in, and allowed me to come and saked me to "wet" or They shortened in, and allowed me to come up with them, and asked me to "wet," or, in other words, diminish the jug of old rye they had aboard; but I excused myself with the plea that I had plenty on board. They asked me how far I was going. I told them as far as Mount Vernon, if my horse didn't tire out. They mentioned horse didn't tire out. They mentioned a ant tavern ten or twelve miles ahead nor their actions. But I was bound to go ahead. I had a brace of revolvers and a ahead. I had a brace of revolvers and a nice knife; my money was in a belt around my body. I drove slow, in hopes that they would go on, and I should see them no more. It was nearly dark when I saw the tavern sign ahead. At the same time I saw their wagon before the door. I would have passed on, but my horse needed rest. I hauled up, and a woman came to the door. She turned as pale as a sheet when she saw me. She did not speak, but with a meaning look she put her finger on her lips, and beckoned me to come in. She was the wife of my client.

why she did not go to Judge R——, an ax-Senator of the United States, whose of fice was in town. I told her that I was a young man at the bar, &c. She mournfully said that he had asked a retaining fee beyond her means; besides, he did not want to touch the case, for her husband was suspected of belonging to an extensive band of horse-thieves and counterfeiters whose headquarters were then at Moore's practic. Never shall I forget the words they were:

"I think I shall stay," I replied.
"We'll all stay, then, I guess, and make a night of it," said one of the cut-throats. "You will have to put up your own hoss; here's a lantern," said the woman.

I nover could see a woman weep without feeling like a weak fool myself. If it hadn't been eyes brightened with "pearly tears," I'd never been caught in the lass of matrimony. My would-be client was pretty. The handkerchief that hid her atreaming eyes didn't hide her red lips; and her anewy bosom rose and fell like a white gull in a gale of wind at sea. I took the case, and she gave me the particulars. The gang, of which he was not a member, had persuaded him to take the horse. He knew it was stolen, and, like a fool, achieved the whole stolenged it when arrested. Worse still, he had trimmed the horse's mane and tail so as to alter its appearance, and the opposition could be come in."

"I am used to that," I said. "Gentlemen, excuse me I will join you in a drink when you in a drink when I come in."

"Good on your head! more whiskey, old gal," shouted they.

I went out and glanced at their wagon. It was old-fashioned, and linch pins secured the work of a moment, and I threw them in the darkness as far as I could. To untie my horse and dash off was but the work of an instant. The road lay down a steep hill, but my lantern lighted me somewhat.

The trial came on. I worked hard to get jury of ignorant men, who had more eart than brains; who, if they could not athem the depths of an argument or follow the labrynthine mazes of law could leel for a young fellow in a bad fix and a weeping, pretty wife, nearly heart-broken and quite distracted.

Enowing the use of "effect," I told her wife of the wagon. Finally they seemed to fetch up in the woods. One or two shrieks I heard as I swept on, leaving them far behind. For some time I hurried my horse you'd better believe I "rid." It was a little after midnight when I got to Mount Vernor.

The next day I heard that Moore's prairie team had run away, and two men of the team had run away, and two men of the four had been so badly hurt that their lives were despaired of; but I did not cry. My olients got the money, but I didn't travel that road any more, Mesers. Johnston & Langhorne: Dean Sins: I contracted chills and fevers in the lower country in September, 1865, and, notwithstanding a residence in the in September, 1866, and, notwithstanding a residence in the mountains of Virginia, still continued to suffer from them up to the following December, and from the first warm weather in the beginning of spring was subject to attacks of them at intervals of from two to three weeks. The physician in Laxington gave me quinine and calquiel, the only effect of which was to stop the chills for a time. The calomel, although I took a large quantity of it, did not act. When I arrived in hichmond, in the early part of July, I was sgain affected with them. It was recommended to me to take your Nolandine. In ten days after the first does I felt like a new man. All the spring I had been wash, debilitated and subject to a swimming in the bead; but now, though feeble from the effects of the fever, I feel in perfect health, and can perceive a daily improvement in my condition. And now thanks to your medicine, which I hope will prove a bicusing to both you and your fellow creatures, I am entirely recovered, and chills and fovers summ at last to have bidden me a final affice.
