At the upper end of the hall was a stage. The cortain was down. It moved, and forthwith burst a most piteons wail. We tried to find out the cause. We looked closely at some of the mourners. They were Mexicans, with their heads enveloped in rebosos. I looked towards the stage.— The curtain moved again; an arm was displayed. The cries had no boundary. The whole mass of breathing souls surged, and wept. A silence succeeded. One or two let a solitary yelp, but we noticed that those next to them punched them pretty roughly in the sides, and said: "Not time yet, not time yet." At the same moment yet, not time yet." At the same moment we saw many a "stupid old woman" carry her force from her line to her evelids. her fingers from her lips to her eyelids.— She was bound to shed tears. The time

GENERALLY: I am again prepared to do all kinds of Work entrusted to me. I could not rent a shop in October last to suit me, so I have built a new Shop on Chesnut street, between Fourth and Fitth, near my residence. I think I am fixed to suit the times; I am under very little expense, and will favor my patrons accordingly. The old fault, thank God, has played out! "Clark is a good workman, but he will drink." He is now done, and has associated himself with the Friends of Temperance, to drop the one and plead for the other the balance of his life. Give me a for the other the balance of his life.
