My Husband's Second Wife, My husband came tenderly by my side. "Are you going out this evening, love?"

"Of course I am!"

I looked down complacently at my dress of pink crape, dew-dropped over with crystal, and the trails of pink azaleas that caught up its folds here and there. A diamond bracelet encircled the one white arm, and a little cross blazed fifully on my throat. I had never looked better, and I felt a sort of girlish pride as my eyes met the fairy reflection in the mirror.

"Come, Gerald, make haste! Why you haven't begun to dress yet!"

haven't begun to dress yet !"
"Where were my wifely instincts, that I did not see the haggard, drawn look in his features—the fevered light in his eyes?"

"I can't go to-night, Madeline—I am not well enough." "You are never 'well enough' to oblige me, Gerald. I am tired of being put off with such excuses."

He made no answer, but dropped his head in his hands, on the table before "Oh, come, Gerald," I urged, petulantly; "it is so awkward for me to go alone ways."

He shook his head listlessly. "I thought perhaps you would be willing to remain at home with me, Made-line."

"Men are so selfish," I said, plaintively; 'and I am all dressed. Claudia took a half hour for my hair. I dare say you are determined not to go.' No answer again.

"Well, if you choose to be sullen, I can't help it," I said, lightly, as I turned and went out of the room, adjusting my boquet holder, the tube-roses and heliotropes was I heartless and cruel? Had I ceased to love my husband? From the bottom of my heart I believed that I loved bottom of my heart I believed that I loved him truly and tenderly as ever a wife did; but I had been so spoiled and petted all my brief selfish life, that the better instincts were, so to speak, entombed alive.

I went to the party, and had my fill of adulation and homage, as usual. The hours seemed to glide away, shod with roses, and winged with music and percentage of the protracted discussion of the Tariff bill, he says: fume; and it was not until, wearied with dancing, I sought a momentary refuge in all sides of the tariff question, few of the the half-lighted tea-room, that I heard have attracted close attention in the House Gerald Glen !"

Hurried by some unaccountable impulse Hurried by some unaccountable impulse, I sprang out the moment the carriage wheels touched the curbstone, and rushed up to my husband's room. The door was locked, but I could see a light shining faintly under the threshold. I knocked wildly and persistently.

"I was once; now they would be the bitterest reprosch my eyes could meet. O Gerald, had I been less vain and thought-less and extravagant—"

I checked myself, and a robin, singing in the perfumed depths of the apple blossoms, took up the dropped current of sound.

"That's right, little read-breast," said my husband, half joking, "talk her down! She has forgotten that our past is dead and gone, and that we have turned over a new page in the Book of Existence."

"Madeline, do you know how I feel sometimes, when I sit and look at you?"

"Well, I feel like a widower who has parried sgain." M. heart gave a little superstitions jump. "Like a widower who has married sgain, Gerald!"

"Yes, I can remember my first wife—a brilliant, thoughtless child, without any idea beyond the gratification of present whims—a spoiled plaything! Well, that little Madeline has vanished away into the past somewhere; she has gone away to return no more, and in her stead I my second wife—a thoughtful, tender woman, whose watchful love surrounds me like an atmosphere, whose character grows more noble and develops itself into new depths and beauty every day."
I was kneeling at his side now, with my cheek upon his arm, and my eyes looking "And which do you love best Gerald-the first or second wife?"

"I think the trials and vicissitudes through which we have passed are wel-come, indeed. They have brought me as their harvest of fruits the priceless treasure of my second wife." That was what Gerald answered me-

"Fine, enterprising young fellow!"—
"Great pity!"—"Totally ruined; so Bess and McMorken says!"—"Recklessness and extravagance of his wife!"

All these vague fragments I heard; and then some one said:

"And what is he going to do now?"

"What can he do? Poor fellow! I am sorry; but he should have calculated his income and expenses better."

"Or his wife should. Oh, these women!

SOUTHERN LIFE INSURANCE CO.

To the People of North Carolina : At the request of Gen. John B. Gordon, Presi dent Atlanta Department, I have come to your State to bring prominently before you the claims and merits of the Southern Life Insurance Company. It is under the control of as honorable and as responsible men as there are in the land. It is managed in the most prudent and economical manner, and will deal justly and fairly with

We have no war to make upon other Insurance Companies, but we do wish to improve upon the people the importance of keeping their money at home. By caroful calculation it is estimated that s sum of not less than twelve millions, annually, is sent from the South to the North for Life Insurance, and unless checked will surely prove suicidal to our interests. We ask you to consid er how greatly the material interests of this section would be benefited by the retention of those enormous sums in our midst. We send no money away to enrich foreign cap italists, but every dollar of premium, less ex-This department of the Company has ope
