nother Story About Bees. How a Cool

Headed Man Escaped Death, A story is going the rounds of the news-papers to the effect that a swarm of bees lately lis upon a boy in Missouri, and that the father of the boy got him off with but one sting (given by a bae that the child bi-to keep it out of his mouth), by telling him to stand perfectly still, and then removing his hat, which was covered with bees, and his hat, which was covered with bees, and placing it on a bush, to which the other bees immediately swarmed. This is pronounced "gammon" by some ignoramus es, but to every person who knows anything of bees is will be the most probable thing in the world. Bees are not offensive creatures, and a million of them might settle upon the naked person of the Kenneky cant. tucky giant, and he not be stang even once, were be to keep perfectly quiet; but were be to move, or endeavor to remove them, the bees would immediately popularity attained by the se fine assume the offeneive defensive mode of whiskles due to their PE-FEOT fend themselves by offending him—and probably ating him to death in a probably ating him to de ne Equire's house; and we never think of

Piato and thyme, and Hymettus and the drowsy hum of bees, without being reminded of those dear honey-makers of the long, long ago—for the windew at which we sat at school looked right out upon the hives, and there was always a delicious murmur going on among them delicious murmur going on among them that was as sweet as the namorum murmur of the neighboring woods. Well, one not day in summer the old Equire was standing before his hives, bare-headed and bald-headed, like Elisha the Prophet—but bald-headed, like Elisha the Prophet—but with bees, not boys, or bears, near bim—and with nothing on him but his shirt and shoes and trousers, when the inhabitant of one of the hives suddenly swarmed, and lit upon the venerable man's pate, which they covered in layers two or three inchedeep, making his headpiece the most comical piece of humanity we ever gaz d upon, so that we hever think of it without laughing, though the worms ate it some forty years since, creeping in ate it some forty years since, creeping in and creeping out, as their manner is, and as they will with yours, sir, clever as you think it is—and with yours, madame, handsome as it is. We suppose the bees mistock the 'Squire's lace for a gigantic full-blown rose of a new pattern, which required to be looked into immediately, for it was of a most beautiful, new rum required to be looked into immediately, for it was of a most beautiful new rum color, which the 'Squire heightened with twelve daily applications of internal paint, a proper (or rather a common) practice emough in those ante-(and ante-) temperance times, when rum was rum and punch was perfect. The 'Squire was thoroughlup to the dolges of the apes, and so he stood still, as stiff as an iron ramrod that had stood the inspection of the Great Frederick. Just then Mrs. S—— came to the door of the house, and recing her husband in such a plight, gave the usual feminian exceech in such cases male and provided, and then said to him, "Keep where you are, while I go and get the broom to bronn 'em eff." 'I m dead if I do!" thought the 'Squire. He there managed to grope his way to a large tub which he had just previously filled with water from a neighboring brook for rinsing purposes, and

Into this water he dipped his head slowly till it was ontirely immersed, and held it there, hold-ing his breath at the same time, till ever bee was made sufficiently stingle is to have satisfied Mr. Bugene Wraybann himself.— The water swarmed with bees, and the old mothers awarmed with bees, and the old mothers awarmed with bees, and the old mothers awarmed which he haves with the only white face he had worn for almost half a century, and which he haves re-peated till be lay in his coffin. CALIFORNIA ROHAVOE.

His Daughter,

Here in Now York, way back when the gold fever first started in California, there lived a young mechanic who, getking mar-ried in a sort of a way, found himself at the age of n neteen the father of a baby and proprietor of quite a family of his wife's relation. Not liking the situation he threw up his trade and rushed to the gold fields in one of the countless vessels that daily sailed for the Eldorado. Arrived that daily sailed for the Eldorado. Arrived there he thought of his wife and felt bad, of baby and felt badder, of his mother insaw and felt baddest. So he wisely concluded to lay low and see how the old thing worked, the old thing being his mother-in-law. Years and years past by, the truant became a merchant, and finally a banker of the Pacific slope—ne doubt forgot all about the wife and lady, at all events he stayed there and made no sign.

cvents he stayed there and hady, at all events he stayed there and made no sign.

The young wife thought of the Chagres fever and the Penama sque, and put a look of his hair among the obituary pages of the family Bible. She was poor, and when a well-to do neighbor offered to adopt a little Emma, she allowed the matter to be carried out, and Emma S. became Emma B. She was brought up to believe Mrs. S. a distant relation, and finally the family with whom she lived moved to the city, and very little intercourse passed between the actual mother and daughter. Mrs. S. pever married again, but opened a smell millinery shop and prespered in her balive towr. Emma became an accomplished and pretty girl. Her adopted mother died, and, strange to say, the heart of the widower, Mr. B., 'caned very much toward the still nice-looking Mrs. F. Unknown to any one, he was this summer presecuting his courtship was this summer presecuting his courtailp in that direction. He sent Emms, with a Pitter of the court of the court of the courtain product of trunks, to Saratoga, to remain the season, under the chaperonage of a friend's family.

Emma became a belle directly, and word was sent to her adopted father of the over-tures made by a Colonel S, a San Francisco backer. The name was the same as the willow's but it was as common as smith, and Mr. B. thought nothing of that, but he went on and talked with his daughter's lover, and found him a man of 38 or 40 years of age, and of course sought to know something of Col. S.'s pedigree. Then it came out where he was born and where he itsed, and so Mr. B. get well convinced that he was no other than the recrease corrected the town of H. He. recreant carpenter of the town of A. He taxed him with a previous marriage, and the gallant Colonel confessed the young ladiscression, but as time had outlawed the debt, he ignored any respon intity at that period of his respectable career. Then he gustied to the supposed parent about his love for Emma-he had felt drawn toward ber at first sight, etc., etc. add then came out the story of the girl's adoption. The name of the mother and, more convincing still, the name of the mother in law.

There was a tall scene betwen the two men. But Cot. S. was a man of the world and he saw the matter in a rational light. and he saw the matter in a rational light.

He would go to New York where Mrs. B. was, and take his deserted wife to his manly breast, and the spouse-like feeling he had contracted for Emma should be merged into a fatherly one. This new view of the predicament didn't suit Mr.
B. He'd much rather the colonel should marrr his own daughter, than come in between his little matrimonial arrangements. However, there was but one course. The cloud was Mrs. S.'s husband, and he was Emma s father, and here was Emms, in a lavender lawn robe de chambre, in her room weeping at the supposed difficulty between her father and lover.

To make this a little shorter than the To make this a little shorter than the regular volumes of a circulating library leve tail, the daughter was fully enlightened, and assured that, however, willing and desirous she might be, the laws of her country expressly forbid marrying fathers, even it they had rest ed all their histime apart and abroad. Off went Colonel S. to New Y. rk to see Mis. S., and off on the laws train want a latter from Mr. B. to sime train went a letter from Mr. B. to the grass widow with a prain statement of all the fice, including the soft condiof all the fices, including the soft condi-tion of the gentleman's (Mr. B.'s) heart.— After eighteen years abandonment a di-verce was the easiest thing in life. In the Colonel's case absence and not made the widow's heart grow fonder.

It was Mr. B.'s money and countenance that had built up a lucrative business for her. He was more, the father of her child.

that had built up a lucrative business for her. He was more, the father of her child. So that good looking and rich as the Colonel is at present, he has got a dead shake from his old-time wife, who will apply for a divorce, get it of course, and take Mr. B. for better and worse just as room as the month of September arrives. The mother and daughter are reunited here in the city waiting events. Colonel B. the city waiting events. Colonel B. was at the Saratoge races, the embediment of ease, and dear old Mr. B. hovers about the milliner and his daughter like a benignant full size chernt.
