An Unauswerable Argument,

Am Umanswormble Argument,
The strongest argument which can be urged against the alvisability of administering such corrosive and nerve-destroying poisons as anomic and quinine for intermittent and remittent fewers, is the varity superior success in the prevention and cure of such diseases of a medicine which is the vory antipode of the above usased drugs, both in respect of its composition and the results wrought by it. Such a medicine is Hostotter's Stomach Citters, a pursiy vegetable preparation, which not only viralizates with wonderful promptitude every trace of fewer and ague, and sindred type as of mararious disease, from the system, but it is certain proventire of all maladies begotten of missima-tarized air and ware. These results missoral anti febrile remedies do not off-ct with certainty, and tivele continued has entails consequences highly periodices to the system. The Bitters, on the contrary, int only afford specdy review, but establish health on a permanent basis.
