EDITORIAL NOTES.
An historic flag, the one borne by the Confederate steamer Shenandoah during the war, is now on exhibition in Richmond.

Mr. TENNISON, writing to decline an invitation to the Balaklava banquet says heartily, "I will drink a cup of wine on the 23rd to the health and long life of all your fine fellows."

QUEEN VICTORIA'S youngest son, Prince Leopold, has joined the temperance movement, having accepted the presidency of the Oxford branch of the Church of England Temperance Society.

THE New York Herald has a curious dispatch from Washington to the effect that a "carted" otherwise described as a "truce" was arranged between the advocates and leading Republican opponents of third-term, on the heels of the Ohio election; that the calling of Zach Chandler into the Cabinet was not a caprice, but a part of a well matured plan of campaign; that it was agreed to make the result in Tuesday's elections a test. If the elections went Democratic, all idea of Mr. Grant's re-nomination was to be abandoned; if Republican, the opposition to it was abandoned.

MISS LILLIAN STOVES, a granddaughter of Andy Johnson, and the one who was with him when he was stricken down with the paralysis that ended his life, was married last week to Thomas Maloney, a promising young lawyer of Greenville, Tenn.

MISS BLACK, upon whom Byron's passing regards bestowed immortality, has just died in Athens at the age of 78. A lightly-written poem, composed upon a temporary impulse of admiration and attachment, by the subtle skill of the poet, sufficed to surround her with a halo of interest while she lived; and now that she is dead, she will be thought of yet more naturally and respectfully as "The Maid of Athens."

THE following article from the Washington Capital, which we transfer to our columns, will show our readers what a thoughtful hard money paper has to say about the late elections, and the checking of the "flood ways." We are satisfied that a campaign against the extravagance and corruption of the Radical party will be more productive of good results, than fighting the money power, however oppressive it may be - and against certain sections and classes. We expect Congress to rectify mistakes, and we look with the most cheerful anticipations of success in 1876.

The tidal wave that set in so fiercely against the present corrupt administration seems to have subsided suddenly as it gathered. That it should have done so at this time, and not when the presidential contest was pending, moves us to such joy of rejoicing that we could almost join Brother Newman in his cry of prayerful thankfulness to Divine Providence, who is supposed by the Newmans to be largely engaged at the present writing in guarding the polls for the benefit of Grant, Delano, Dawes, Chandler and others.

It was foretold of the Democracy, when the Republican organization began to disintegrate and gather about the standard of its ancient foe, that the Democratic leaders would commit some great folly that might sicken the people and drive the more thoughtful from its support.

The leaders bandied with all speed to make that prophetic history. For nearly fourteen years the money power - by which we mean accumulated capital in the hands of traders and corporations - has had entire control of our Government and shaped legislation to suit its selfish interests. This power took stock in Grant to such an extent that when the crash came and it re-embarked in the flume of storm it carried with it the Administration.

Ohio led off. In that great State, the agricultural interest, the controlling interest, was utterly prostrate. Trade was paralyzed and labor out of employ. All honest men, sick of Republican corruption, looked about them eagerly for some other organization with which to co-operate. The Democracy had only to assemble, denounce corruption, promise reform and nominate their best men to insure an easy triumph. Drunk, however, with the first sweet draughts of power, they began quarrelling among themselves over an abstract financial question, which neither understood, and ended with a proposition in the way of a platform that not only violated all the principles, practices, traditions and maxims of the party, but was so absurd in itself that every thoughtful man turned away in disgust.

The Ohio Democracy solemnly demanded not only a continuation of the Republican issue of depreciated currency, but an increased volume. Now, it did not call for Brown-Sequard's double brain to know that there was but one way in which this increased volume could be accomplished, and that was to fetch the Government into the field as a purchaser, either through war or a vast system of internal improvements. The last was known to be the favorite scheme of the wise men who thus committed the party to bankruptcy or repudiation. It was seriously proposed that the political organization that boasts of being born of Jefferson and trained by Jackson, Benton and Polk, should be called for a strict construction of the Constitution; that proclaimed reform and believed in an economical administration, should order the land with projected railroads and canals, that labor might be consolidated and supported as under some despotic government in Europe, and the country flooded with depreciated or worthless paper, in the shape of currency, in payment thereof.

Under this novel proposition the evils of Republicanism, the thieves in office, the corruptions of Washington, the bayonet rule in the South, the hard times and heavy taxation, were all forgotten in a fierce fight over a political abstraction that divided the Democracy and afforded all sensible men, the money power was not slow to discover the opening, and the poor De-mocrat was assailed to find all the old corrupt machinery that oils the poles again in easy working order, and what he had so vigorously demanded, in an increased volume of currency, was being complied with in a way far more intricate than pleasant. It is not generally known, but it will be demonstrative by the House of Representatives, that the Government here can swell the volume of currency unchecked whenever the exigencies of an election calls for such increase. We are assured from all sides, and have no reason to doubt the fact, that money has been more freely used in the late elections than in the more prosperous times of the Administration. We do not mean by this so much a charge of bribery as the quite as offensive execution in stimulating political excitement in the way of moon-meetings, windy orations, and the flood of political literature that is about as dirty as it is stupid.

MAIL advices from Europe give a melancholy account of the depression of trade in Germany and its effect on the industrial classes. Serious distress is anticipated among the working classes during the winter, and there are fears of a financial crisis. Accounts of the failure of the Russian crops add to the discouragement of the outlook on the continent. It is said that never before has a failure been so general in Russia.

The election in Maryland on Tuesday last seems to have been contested with marked spirit and bitterness. The smoke of the battle has cleared away sufficiently to exhibit the figures of the poll. Mr. Carroll's total vote is not yet authentically ascertained, but the majority will probably be about 14,000. The Senate and House of Delegates are decidedly Democratic, with an opposition composed of Independent Democrats, Republicans and B. S. forces.
