A Chicago trishman house stands ern railroad track, and the other day a projecting timber on a freight train knocked one of the walls down. Burns wanted pay for the damage, but the company would give him nothing. Then he set a ladder half across the track, climed up and began to brush. Pretty soon a passenger train came up, stopped, and after an exchange of profanity. Burns declared that he had a right to paint his house, and pulled out a pistol and promised to shoot the engineer if he opened a valve. Seven trains were soon blocked, officers came and argued and threatened, but all to no purpose. The Celt was on his own ground, and it was not safe to disturb him, and a round sum in bank bills had to be counted out before he would leave the ladder.
