he Children Should be Morally

Oh, no, my Texas friend, you re greatly mistaken. I am not on. I have never written a ine from which you could draw uch an inference. I have a ery fair education myself and would not exchange it for all would I write anything or do nything that would deprive others of the same blessing. I ould not if I would, for educaion is now within the easy reach of all who desire it. But what I do maintain is that constant, earnest moral training should go along with it in every family and school and college. I maintain that it is more important to teach the youth of our country morality than algegra or astronomy. If the children are the wards of the nation demands good citizenship more than scholarship. Now in, what schools or colleges is morality made paramount or of equal importance to science? In how many is it taught at all? How many professors deem it a duty to impress upon their pupils obedience to parents, obedience to law, honesty, truth, temperance, chastity, industry, and to do unto others as they would have others do unto them? If you say that these things should be taught at home, the answer is they are not taught at home.
