duced to Become a Lawyer with Disastrous Results to Himself and a Narrow

[Copyright, 1890, by Edgar W. Nye.] In order to note the advancement made by the great science of phrenology in the past thirty years I went yesterday to visit the leading phrenologist of the United States, and no doubt of the world. Frankly I must confess that it was a case of going quietly to scoff and remaining to pray, for I don't believe that Inspector Byrnes is "on to me" with more fidelity or accuracy than the venerable bump manipulator of Broadway, who has been at it for forty-five years and who turned me over yester-

There is one thing about me which arouses my admiration, and that is that when I am detected and overtaken and discovered in the delictu business and handcuffed to a large cook stove I know bound, but always open to conviction and sentence.

Thirty years or so ago I took my mother to a phrenologist to have her head looked over, feeling that as a parent she was not proving the success that I had hoped for, and after I had counted out six dozen eggs for him, which I had brought to pay him for the work, he offered to examine my head and give me a written schedule of it for two pounds of butter which I still had left over.

He wanted to please my mother, and so he spoke highly of my talents-higher than they deserved, I think. He was days had hardly risen to the position of a science. It was merely a "job." This man, whom I will call Professor Biltong, had to combine other things with his phrenology, such as chiropody and the their photographs taken as a ner measure the earth, nor the down health, and gamed eighteen sale of fruit trees. Phrenology at that time was found often combined with astrology and phlebotomy.

In those days men had not learned to add physiognomy and a general knowledge of human nature to the science of phrenology, and thus read a man as we would read a hotel register.

It was for that reason, perhaps, that Professor Biltong erred in reading me with a far away look, and marking out for me a future occupation to which I was best adapted.

Possibly it may interest the reader, specially the boy or young man whoreads this, if I tell him briefly how Prohe caused me thereby much annoyance on that, and so on. and would have cost me a great deal of money if I had had it at the time. Closing my term there with high honors and a baritone voice, which I cannot account for to this day, I got a place to study law and tidy up the cuspidors for a country lawyer whose name and memory are green and beautiful yet in the warmest corner of my heart. While I did not make a lawyer of myself, it was not his fault. It was my own. And Biltong should have told me so on the start. That's what I paid him for. But in those days every boy who were big hat and got tired easily with manual toll was set aside for the minis-try or the law. That's why so many sleeping cars are attached to the gospel trains today, and so many lawyers hang by the gills to politics and eat rump steak with thankful hearts.

fessor Biltong I read Blackstone all one summer, and his thrilling remarks about the right of piscary and the fee simple and fee tail and seisin which marred the history of the common law of England. I tried, oh, so hard, to cuddle up to Justinian and to get intimate with Coke, and to enjoy commons of Estorers and commons of Turbary. Meantime I swept out the office, ran of errands, got my board bill and trou-sers receipted and looked forward to the time when I should shake the resolution This phrenologist had a very hairy of the most stubborn and strong hearted This phrenologist had a very hairy of the most stubborn and strong hearted and Castle Garden air, and when his juror that ever drew his little old $2 a cl'ar uv it, so I 'dopted a rule, an' when the fust chile was born we called him

so. I went away by stage to a desolate and threadbare county seat somewhere, and laid out my little stock of unripe knowledge before that committee, and they sampled it one after another and gently took me one side, and instead of telling me, as they might, most truthfully, to go home and never fool with the law any more, they hated to hurt my feelings, and so they told me to study fessor Biltong erred in my case and how some more on this point and brush up

Now I do not blame phrenology for this, but Professor Biltong, who should have seen that while I had some of the prerequisites for a lawyer I lacked one great essential, and that was the ability to repeat a law, aruling or a defi-nition in the exact language of anybody

That ignorance on his part cost me many a reluctant, evasive and finally tear dimmed dollar, and came very near landing me in the lap of an overworked and overburdened public, one of the most pitiful objects known to the entomologist, viz., a pettifogger.

If this letter were not already too personal I would add the stenographic and geological report made on my head yesterday. It is so accurate that it reminds me almost of the old days of necromancy, whatever that is.
