BILL ARP'S LETTER.
 GEORGIA VETERANS IN VIRGINIA GRAVES KEPT IN MIND.
 But the Mounds Should be Marked—An Appeal to the Veterans to Contribute to a Good Fund.
 There are 1,097 confederate soldiers buried in the cemetery at the University of Virginia, near Charlottesville. Two hundred and twenty-five of them are Georgians. The good people who live there have not neglected their graves and have expended $1,500 on the enclosure and the shrubbery. But the Old Dominion is almost a universal graveyard, and it is not right for the other States to throw all the burden upon them. The appeal now comes to us for help. There is hardly a Georgian regiment that is not represented in that cemetery, and every soldier's name and company has been carefully preserved and every grave identified. Two years ago a similar appeal was made from Fredericksburg, and our people responded as patriots and Christians, and every grave was marked with a marble headstone. That good work is done—well done—permanently done, and those who gave the dollar for one soldier will have a good credential when they meet these soldiers "across the river."
 Many years ago James Berry was convicted of robbery in our court. The evidence was strong but altogether circumstantial, and was sent to the penitentiary. He had served three years of his time when another man, who was in jail in a distant county charged with robbery, sent for Judge Underwood and said, "I am guilty and cannot escape. I am also guilty of the crime for which Berry is now in prison. He knew nothing about it and is innocent. It has made me miserable all these years that he is suffering for my crime. I don't want to meet him and face him in the penitentiary. I have now written my confession and made plain my guilt and his innocence, so please see the governor and have him pardoned and sent away before I get there. His poor, suffering face will haunt me like a ghost." Berry was released and Roberts convicted, but they never met.
 When I ruminate upon the hard, long service of these soldiers and their sufferings and death afar from home and kindred, their hurried burial in shallow graves with no weep a tear or send a last message to those who loved them, and when I ponder upon their neglected graves and the indifference of our people it makes me shudder at the thought of meeting them on the other side. I believe in that. We will all meet. I believe that we will have to face every one we have wronged or neglected. There is no excuse for this neglect of our soldier dead. One dollar for each grave will mark it and keep it green and there are thousands of our people who can spare that much and be no poorer. Until this is done it will do for us to boast of our patriotism or our gratitude.
 The exposition is a big thing, and so is King Solomon and the cyclorama, and Atlanta is a wonderful city, and we have seen thousands and thousands of dollars pouring into her hoppers every day and from every train, and as I looked upon the hurrying crowds I wished that every man and every woman would leave a dime somewhere to spend on our dead soldiers' graves. I wonder if there are not 225 good, big-hearted people in Georgia who will send me a dollar, or send it to Mrs. W. B. Harris, at Charlottesville. I wonder if these are not a few who will send $5. I wonder if there are not eighty-two in Alabama who can spare a dollar for her soldiers, and eighty-two in Louisiana, and sixty-nine in Mississippi, and 200 in North Carolina, and thirteen in Florida, and 101 in South Carolina, and 192 in Virginia. I looked over the list of our Georgia boys who are sleeping there, and wondered if their kindred knew where they were buried. I saw some familiar names from the old Eighth, to which I was attached, and I wondered if the friends of Funderburk and Huckaby and Dunn knew of their burial place, and that woman's loving hands did every year place flowers on their graves. I knew those boys and it pleased me that their bones are thus honored. They went at the first call and did what they could. General Lee did no more.
 Friends, countrymen, good people send in your mites as the Lord hath blessed you and let us preserve the homes of dead. I believe in church and cultivating our emotions, our spiritual nature, love, pity, gratified; those virtues that refine us here and will be a passport over there. I believe in happy homes and cheerful firesides and obedient children, and in the faces that bring sunshine when they come. This is my creed. Of course there are ups and downs and losses and crosses, and big troubles and little troubles in every household, but they don't last long, and we anticipate a sight of trouble that never comes. I am in a little domestic trouble right now, but it won't last long, I reckon. I've been leaving the Jersey calf run in the grove in front of the house and my wife told me that calf would come up the steps and eat up the flowers, but I said no; that cows had less sense than any other animal, and nobody ever heard of a calf climbing up five steps to get into a flower garden. She had bordered the front yard with chrysanthemums that were just beginning to bloom, and sure enough when I looked out the front door this morning there wasn't a flower left on one side of the yard. They were all eaten down, and the plagued calf had begun on the roses. The sight made me sick away down. The front yard looked like a man with one side of his whiskers shaved off. My first impulse was to rush frantically forth and kill the calf. My next was to drive her gently over to the other side, and let her eat that down, so as to restore the equilibrium. Then I wondered if they were not thick enough for me to take some of them up and replant the side that was desolate, but the ground was too hard and dry, and so I drove the aggravating beast to the lot and shut her up. My comfort is that I bought that calf to please Mrs. Arp, and Captain Peacock never told me that she was fond of chrysanthemums. I called my wife to the door and pointed to the pitiful spectacle. She never said a word. She never said, "I told you so," but she looked sad, very sad, like somebody was dead. For a little while she posed as a martyr, and then resumed her household duties. The trouble is that every time we see the calf we see it and it mars the pleasant prospect. It keeps us from feeling calm and serene. But by and by the flowers will fade and the leaves will fall, and then we will forget it. Old Father Time is a good doctor.

 Well, I haven't been to see King Solomon, and I am not going until the controversy is settled. The Baptists say it is a good thing and the Methodist say it is a very bad thing, and so I will wait until the Presbyterians have their say. Our preacher hasn't said a word. Heard a man say that the Baptists were increasing more rapidly than he ever knew them, for there were 12,000 new ones in the show every night. Maybe they were the same old ones who keep on coming. But it is well for us that the preachers stand like sentinels on the watch towers and warn the people. They may sometimes cry danger when there is no danger, but they are, nevertheless, the best sentinels we have got. There may be extremists and fanatics among them, but I had rather risk them for advice and good example than any other profession. They are the leaven that preserves morality. They are our comfort in trouble and sickness and at the open grave. Good people honor them everywhere. There is not a college in our State, male or female, but has a preacher at its head, and their high moral tone and Christian influence over the youth of the land inspires them to noble conduct and goes down from generation to generation.
 Blessings on the preachers.
 BILL ARP.

Russell Sage to Boys.
 The boy who is wanted in the business world of to-day must be educated, says Russell Sage in an admirable article on "The Boy That is Wanted," in the November Ladies Home Journal. If his parents cannot afford to give him a high-school or college education, he must learn to study without the aid of a teacher, in the early morning before business begins, and in the evenings after business hours. It can no longer be truthfully said that education is out of any one's reach. Our splendid school system, where one can study by day or in the evening, has put the priceless treasure of an education in reach of all. The main thing, in the beginning, that I would impress upon boys is one of the great commandments, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." The boy who respects his father and mother, who treats his sisters and brothers with loving kindness, has laid a good foundation for a successful career. You will do as your parents tell you, and that certainly will be to study. Don't be in a hurry to get away from your school books. The care and responsibilities of business life will come soon enough. Go to school as long as you can, and remember, every hour spent in study in your youth will be worth money to you in after life. Read good books—the Bible above all. Make yourself acquainted with history. Study the progress of nations and the careers of men who have made nations great. If you have no library of your own, join one of the numerous associations to be found in all cities, where good, healthful books may be obtained. Study religion, science, statecraft, and history. Learn to read intelligently, so that you may turn to practical use in after life the readings of your youth. Be sure to begin right. Do not waste time in reading trashy books.
 La Grippe Again.
 During the epidemic of La Grippe last season, Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, proved to be the best remedy. Reports from the many who used it confirm this statement. They were not only quickly relieved, but the disease left no bad after results. We ask you to give this remedy a trial and we guarantee that you will be satisfied with results, or the purchase price will be refunded. It has no equal in La Grippe, or any Throat, Chest or Lung Trouble. Trial bottles free at A. W. Rowland's Drug Store. Large bottles, 50c. and $1.00.

Mr. C. C. Campbell, of Campbell's Cough Syrup, City of Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "Every body finds relief shortly after using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, for headache."

CONCESSIONS NEEDED.
 SUCH IS THE OPINION OF MR. LEAZER, OF IREDELL.
 And Such all Conservative Men in North Carolina Concede—Mr. Leazer is Right About That, And a Sound Man Generally.
 In your issue of this week, editorial page, appears a short article, quoting the Norwood Vidette's statement of my position upon certain public questions. You also expressed confidence in my party fealty, and other good things, which are duly appreciated. Misunderstandings are so common, it may be proper to make my own statement for myself.
 As district lecturer for the Alliance for the seventh congressional district, I have made about forty public addresses in the last ten weeks. I have endeavored to make a fair presentation of the principles involved in the platform of the organization which I have represented. I have spoken everywhere to mixed audiences of Alliancemen and non-Alliancemen. I have met Alliancemen, cold, lukewarm and red-hot. I have met non-Alliancemen, often sympathizers, often indifferent, sometimes antagonistic, and everywhere I have had comfortable evidence that my understanding and presentation of all the positions involved in our platform were satisfactory, and in most cases strongly approved.
 As to the points involved in your article:
 The Third or New Party.
 I have frequently said, as I believe, that there is not likely to be, any sufficient cause for the organization of a new party. There might be some independent political action, if extreme counsels and prescriptive intolerance prevail in the different factions. I hope the moderate, conservative spirit and methods may rather prevail, to the end that factions may be dispensed, and harmonious co-operation to all good ends may preserve to us the fruits of a quarter century of struggle and labor, and procure for us valuable reform in our Federal system. But there is danger, great danger, unless there be toleration of difference of opinion, and all agree to abide the will of the majority.
 The sub-treasury plan.
 This is my understanding and substantially my presentation of the money-plan of the Alliance, on many different occasions, at Norwood and elsewhere.
 The cardinal doctrine, the essential principle, the main end of the plan is as follows:
 We want more money. We want it issued by the government, the sole constitutional authority to make a legal tender money. We don't want it issued by loan banks, but we want to deprive them of the power to issue money and to measurably control the volume in circulation. We want a good, sound currency, full legal tender for the payment of all debts public and private. We want this currency issued by the government direct to the people, in such manner as shall be safe to the government and for the best interests of the whole people. We want enough of this currency for the easy transaction of the legitimate business of the country.
 How this is to be done: One way of effecting these principles was devised, and presented to the Fifty-first Congress, commonly called the sub-treasury bill. The friends of the bill were heard by the ways and means committee of the House of Representatives: it was then laid away in "the archives of gravity," where it sleeps. After its presentation to Congress, that bill was endorsed by the convention at Ocala, Fla. Their resolution urged the passage of the sub-treasury bill "or of some other measure that will carry out these principles and relieve the necessities of the toiling masses." The Alliance does not now present the sub-treasury bill, as its ultimatum. Some bill, doubtless will be presented to the Fifty-second Congress, designed to accomplish needed ends. Whether the same bill, or one similar to it or something quite different, shall be presented, remains to be seen. The sub-treasury bill presented through Senator Vance and Representative Pickler, is dead, and not in issue.
 The Ocala platform, so much discussed, and so little understood by friend and foe, honestly analyzed, presents these two great policies:
 More money issued by the government for the people;
 Less money taken by the government from the people, and that fairly and equally taxed upon all kinds of wealth and upon all classes of people.
 These two pillars support, and are they not strong enough to bear, a platform upon which all good citizens may stand together?
 One more word: As one who knows he loves his country, to his fellow citizens with whom at elbow-touch we have passed through the trials of civil war and the greater perils of reconstruction, who have devoted the best generation of the race in this century to the preservation of good government and the building of our goodly social fabric, let me make appeal for prudence, for moderation, for toleration, in this crisis. "In essentials, unity; non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity." And now abideth, faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."—A. Leazer in Statesville Landmark. Mooreville, N. C., Oct. 3, 1891.

A Reign of Terror.
 A situation of affairs at once serious and deplorable exists in Pitt county, and the Governor is forced to take extreme steps to put an end to the lawlessness. Eleven years ago Gen. Bryan Grimes was assassinated, and since that time incendiarism has been a common crime in Pitt. A man named Parker, who had boasted that he killed Gen. Grimes, was hanged to a bridge by the indignant people of Washington. Mr. J. J. Laughinghouse, a magistrate, was active in his efforts to ferret out the murderer of Gen. Grimes. For this cause he has been one of the victims of the incendiaries. He has lost a dwelling, gin house, three barns, a peanut barn and a tobacco barn. Mrs. Grimes has lost a barn worth $3,000 worth of peanuts stored in it; Mr. Jack Grimes a large tobacco barn. Thefts are of a nightly occurrence, and now murder is attempted. A man named Proctor was shot at. There were grounds for belief that a negro named Telfair did the shooting. Mr. Laughinghouse, a magistrate, tried him and appeared against him. Since that time he has lost a barn, his stables have been entered, teams taken out and used to haul away his cotton and other property in the night time. The result of this lawlessness is that the insurance companies have canceled their policies on property in that section, and that people from other parts of the state who designed going there to engage in truck farming of tobacco growing will not go. One man had rented a store for the rent money, one store having been burned. Gov. Holt in view of these aggravated offences and this terrible state of affairs, to-day offered a reward of $600, $200 each for the unknown persons who burned the property of J. J. Laughinghouse, Jack Grimes and Mrs. J. H. Saunders. The latter is the sister-in-law of the late Col. W. L. Sanders, and she has, though an entirely inoffensive person, suffered heavily at the hands of the incendiaries. It is all a very dark page in the record of that section of the State.—Raleigh Cor. Wilmington Messenger.

Catarrah, Not Local, But Constitutional.
 Dr. Dio Lewis, the eminent Boston physician, in a magazine article says: "A radical error underlies nearly all medical treatment of catarrah. It is not a disease of the man's nose; it is a disease of the man, showing itself in the nose—a Local exhibition of a Constitutional trouble." Therefore, he argues, the use of snuff and other local applications is wrong, and while they seem to give temporary relief, they really do more harm than good. Other leading authorities agree with Dr. Lewis. Hence, the only proper method of cure for catarrah is by taking a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, reaching every part of the body through the blood, does eliminate all impurities and restores the cause of the trouble and restores the diseased membrane to proper condition. That this is the practical result is proven by thousands of people who have been cured of catarrah by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

He who envies another admits his own inferiority.
 Happy Hoosiers.
 Wm. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, same town, says: "Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like, he had a new lease on life. Only 50c a bottle at A. W. Rowland's Drug Store."
