It was a great show, the greatest go and see it, but I dident go, I tried to get in on the ground floor for my self and wife, but I couldent, and as I dident have money enough for two In the Original Store you I concluded to stay at home. That's loyalty-conjugal loyalty. There was another reason. I heard aman talking about another man and he said: "Yes, dogon him, he can go to Chicago and take his wife, but he can't pay me that grocery bill he's been owing me for six months." I owe a few of these darn little just debts myself, and I dident want to be talked about, so it's all right. It's an awful time to be sending money out of the country anyhow and getting nothing back but pleasure. It's well enough to celebrate Columbus and make a great display, but the times are unfortunate and the great United States senate won't do anything but draw their pay, and everything is demoralized. I wish now we had let Mr. Columbus alone. "Lead us not into temptation," is a good prayer. If there had been no fair nobody would have wanted to go and our money would have been kept at home. Columbus wasent such a wonderful man nohow. He dident mean to discover America, and he dident know he had discovered a new continent when he landed. He was on the make. He stole Indians and carried them away and sold them. History does not make him a great man or a good man, but he was an enterprising navigator and was a success, that's all. I would rather have been Galileo than Columbus. He discovered a far bigger thing and did it on purpose, It was not an accident. He discovered the universe, the solar system, and declared it to mankind. My admiration for him is profound, and I wish the schoolboys and girls to read about him and think about him. it was just 300 years ago this month that he convinced himself that the sun did not go around the earth, but the earth went around the sun. Galileo upset and destroyed the theory of ages, and he challenged the astronomers and the mathematicians of the world to listen to him and to come and examine his proofs. He made the tube of an old organ pipe, and got a spectacle maker to grind him a concave glass for one end and a convex glass for the other, and then to his surprise and delight he saw stars, more stars, new stars. He improved the telescope until it magnified thirty times, and he saw the moons of Jupiter. When he announced his discoveries, the wise men said he was a crank, a fanatic, a fool. They said that any star or planet that could not be seen with the naked eye was not intended to be seen. and it was sacrilege to pry into the mysteries of God. They said there couldent be but seven planets for there were but seven days in the week, and seven metals, and seven holes in a man's head. They kept that poor man under watch, and persecuted him to such an extent that he lost his sight, and when John Milton came to visit him there were two blind men together conversing earnestly and secretly about the universe, the solar system, and the wonderful works of the creator. There was a scene for painter-Milton and Galileo -each soaring in realms of thought far above the conception of mankind, and comforting each other in their affil: tions. But in his last days Galileo triumphed over all his enemies, and estab lished his wonderful discoveries. He lived to reap some rewards, and although blind and deaf, he was visited by the most noted men of the civilized world. Just think what martyrdom the truth has to suffer before it is established. And the king said unto his servants "what honor and dignity hath been done unto Mordecai for this?" And , they said "nothing has been done."

That is the way of the world still. The benefactors of mankind are soon forgotten. Morse and Cyrus Field and Maury and Crawford Long and Elias Howe are passing out of mind and mention. Among Men of Fashlon. Rough, picturesque material of light gray or creamy color and cours as a towel is occasionally seen in the streets of New York, worn by men or fashion during the hot weather, and usually all three pieces of the suit are worn together. Many people wonde. where this cloth comes from, says th. World, for it is not to be found in any of the tailor shops and is never seen in ready-made clothing.

The material is Canadian homespun It is not the homespun which is made in the steam mills, but is the real article, and it is made on hand looms by the inhabitants of Canada during the long winter here. No two pieces are ever alike, and it is impossible to "match it." This cloth is admirably suited for hot weather. Its rough coat makes it look thick and heavy, but it is loosely woven and the wind blows through it. Then, again, it can be thrown into a tub and washed. This cloth comes in all varieties of gray and Cloture is Demanded. OCTOBER 18 .- The taking up of the silver purchase repeal bill was delayed by action on the house joint resolution as to the suffrage at the first municipal elections in Oklahoma territory. It was amended by a proposition that no one shall be authorized to vote or to get the vice-president to disgrace hold office who is not a citizen of the United States. An amendment to strike out the word "male," so as to allow the right of suffrage to women, was voted down-yeas, 9; nays, 40.

Mr. Manderson gave notice of an amendment to rule 5, providing that on any roll-call, except one to determine the presence of a quorum, senators present shall be counted, and that the proposed by Hill with some additions. result of such a vote shall be binding, even if a quorum didn't vote, if the result showed a quorum present.

Mr. Lodge, called up the amendment to the rules he offered Saturday that no senator shall read a written or printed speech. He made a strong appeal to the senate to reform the rules. Mr. Voorhees moved to refer the amendment to the committee on rules, but yielded to Mr. Vest to debate Mr. Lodge's proposition. Before the subject was disposed of the morning hour

The silver bill was taken up, and Mr. Jones, of Nevada, continued the speech he began Saturday. The house resumed the consideration

OCTOBER 20 .- The pending question being Dolph's motion to correct Monday's journal, Morgan resumed the floor. Referring to the supreme court's decision upholding speaker Reed's' counting a quorum, he said the house had rules and precedent for Reed's action, while the senate had not. It was not possible for the senate to take a similar course without being unconstitutional. He undertook to show that in several instances the supreme court, according to public belief, had been influenced by political exigencies. He scouted the idea that it was the duty of a senator to follow the decision of the supreme court as to his action on legislation. Such action would be subversive of senatorial dignity, of honor and conscience. He claimed that the minority only wished to have the present action postponed until the people could be heard from at the polls. Morgan then paid his respects to Hill for remarking upon Morgan's connection with the confederacy. He said the south had not seceded because it objected to the constitution of the The American mule is in danger of United States, and when it found it could not get its desire it came back to that I fought for the confederacy." He had little to say about the rules, except to declare at the close of his speech that the attempt himself and make himself infamous was outrageous, and that the vice-president would not thus lay his hands on the constitution and laws of his country, but would administer the rules and protect the minority.

OCTOBER 21.-Voorhees gave notice of an amendment to the rules.
