Invitations are out for the school and college commencements and soon the old folks at home will be filling up the larder, looking over the poultry yard to see if the chickens are large enough to broil and that the dairy will have plenty milk and butter and the garden will yield an abundant supply of nice fresh vegetables, for our children will be home in a few days we want everything good for them. The Masons are contemplating about having a feast in the near future on a large scale. I wish them great success. By the way I will mention that they have the finest lodge room with only three exceptions in the State, and as fine a body of members as any town in the State can show up. I am very much interested, and like to know when they will give another such a good dinner as they did last year. I enjoyed it very

A FATAL DREAMER.

HE MUST STOP EATING LATE HEARTY SUPPERS.

Nobody would accuse Mr. Coward, proprietor of the Coward House in this city, of being a dreamer, yet he has bad some remarkable experience in that

The night that Ammons stole his horse he dreamed twice that one of his horses was missing. These dreams so impressed him that he got out of bed and went to the barn, when be found out that his dreams were true. A few nights ago he dreamed that one of his hired boys was driving the team, when it ran away and one of the horses was killed. Last Thursday, wishing to send his team up the river, he went with the team himself for fear of his dream coming true, and took the boy along. In the afternoon he returned all right and elated. It being some hours until night he sent the two horses over to the old Cannon homestead to pick grass, under the care of the two boys. While there one of the horses was eating near one of the outdoor chimneys when something occured-what it was is not clear -that caused him to suddenly throw up his head. In doing so he came in violent contact with the chimney, which knocked the house down. In falling he fell with his head against the chimney breaking his neck. The horse died the next day, thus verifying the dream .-Webster Herald.
