IN THE WOODS.

The bobolink sings at the break of day.
The whippoorwill sings at night.
The chickadee chirps, and the branches sway
And the songs are bright, and the songs are gay.
And the shadows are put to flight.
For its' staccato among the swinging boughs,
It's singing among the grass.
And it's one sings high, and it's one sings low,
And it's one sings fast, and another slow,
With a trill and a thrill that stirs the breeze
As the hours of summer pass.
—Frank H. Sweet, in N. Y. Independent.

WERE THEY MARRIED?

It Doesn't Say So But We Think They Were.

Through the pines, across the tiny lake, she could see the team standing at the back door of the Princess Anne hotel.

"All an hour before it goes back to Norfolk," she thought. "How on earth shall we ever get through it without saying more than we mean?"

"What a dreadfully short time an hour," she said.

"Yes," she said, cordially. "Is it not? Do you really ever to take the New York boat to-night?"

"If I get back in time to lecture to my young ladies Saturday morning," he said. "Seems queer for girls to care about diseases of the skin, does it not?"

"Not at all," she said, promptly. "I have thought a great deal about acne myself, though I am not a medical student."

He looked with amused incredulity at her smooth, daintily flushed cheeks.

"How do you treat it?" he asked.

"Medicine is surely a safe topic," she thought. "Why," she said hesitatingly, "I took liquor potassa arseni—that's right?—internally and put a horrid sort of paste on every night for a week."

"What results?" he asked.

"Judge for yourself," she answered, drooping her long lashes and letting a little more flush creep into her cheeks.

They were sitting beneath the pines on an upturned boat; she had realized that the surroundings in themselves were entirely too conducive to unconventional, and now felt irritated for having added to their influence.

She returned vigorously to her safe topic.

"Tell me about women medical students. Do you like teaching them? Are they as bright, really, as your boys?"

"Oh! as a rule, they are good students," he said. "Quid dicit is a real lark; they rattle twice as easily as men. I enjoy puzzling down on a sleepy-looking girl and seeing her get scared."

He stretched his long legs out and laughed with lazy pleasure at the memory.

"How can you?" she said, reproachfully. "I am sure the poor things have a hard enough time anyway and you ought not to be so cruel to them."

"I am not hard on them, really," he said, apologetically. "When it comes to examinations I ask 'em easy questions about eczema and pass every one."

"Do they like you?" she asked, adding, mentally, "Why can't I keep away from personalities today?"

"Oh! yes," he answered. "I hear I am quite a pet with them. But I did not come down to talk of women in medicine. I came down to see if you would marry me."

"Oh, I can't," she gasped.

He got up, walked slowly around one or two pine trees, then came back and stood before her with his hands in his pockets and his chin well down in his collar.

When he did so at home his sisters said despairingly: "It's no use; Dick's mind is made up the other way."

"Why not?" he asked. "A tingle of irritation passed through her. 'I never knew before,' thought she, 'that he was conceited.'"

A loud she said promptly and clearly: "Because I have not the faintest desire to do so."

He sat down by her again, picked up a stick and poked the laurel bush near him thoughtfully.

"I love you," he said, "as much as I know how."

"They usually say that first," she said quickly.

He threw back his head and laughed. "Do they?" he said.

She flushed in intense indignation. "Evidently this whole matter seems to you a flippant joke," she said, bitterly.

"Virginia!" he exclaimed, and then added, quietly: "You have known the whole state of affairs for a long time. I am sure. My great desire to be with you, my happiness when with you, have been patent to all. Sometimes, after a peculiarly happy time together—such as we had at bar Harbor last summer—I have felt sure that you loved me. It hardly seems as if we could have had such days as those unless you did."

He paused and looked intently at her. She met his gaze with a steady look which had so often delighted and interested him—it seemed so inconsistent with certain other of her traits.

WHEN YOU SNEEZE

Cough, Choke, and Gasp for Breath, BEWARE!

It May be a Serious Symptom

THE SPECIFIC

For all Throat and Lung Complaints

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Rev. JOHN K. CHASE, of South Hampton, N. H., says: "The best remedy for La Grippe that I know of is AYER'S Cherry Pectoral."

"Last Spring, I was taken down with La Grippe. At times I was completely prostrated, and so difficult was my breathing that my breast seemed as if confined in an iron cage. I procured a bottle of AYER'S Cherry Pectoral, and no sooner had I begun taking it than relief followed. I could not believe that the effect would be so rapid and the cure so complete. It is truly a wonderful medicine."—W. H. WILLIAMS, Crook City, S. D.

"From my own experience, I take pleasure in voluntarily stating that of all the medicines I ever used for fresh colds and La Grippe, AYER'S Cherry Pectoral is, pre-eminently, the most potent remedy. Ordinarily, the most virulent fresh cold in the head and chest vanishes in a night, as if by magic. Just follow the directions, and AYER'S Cherry Pectoral will do the rest."—Geo. H. Pike, Cadiz, Ky.

"For two years, I suffered from a most distressing cough, which, at last, became of a consumptive character, and very alarming to my friends. After trying various remedies, without success, I began to take AYER'S Cherry Pectoral, and was very soon relieved. Two bottles cured me."—CELESTINE SHROPS, Augusta, Me.

The best remedy for colds, coughs, and the common disorders of the throat and lungs, AYER'S Cherry Pectoral is universally recommended by the profession.

"But to you." You don't know how you regard me—"

"There are some reasons why I could think either way. If I did care, I should know it, I think. Girls who care say they could not be happy doing anything but marrying, while I could go on and do for a long time, and then study, oh, all sorts of things! I might even, after I got past—after people stopped saying I was attractive—like to study medicine. You do have some girls like me in your class, don't you?"

"We have some pretty girls," he said, "who apparently have no real love for the world."

"There!" she cried. "Don't you see how just the way you say that makes a reason for me to be afraid to marry you? Now, your queerness, and abruptness, and the not being sure whether you are making fun of me, are half fascinating, but perhaps if I were married to you they would irritate me, and we should be dreadfully unhappy."

"Could you ever believe that I made fun of you?" he asked. She did not answer, but gazed down into the water with unseeing eyes.

"This getting married is a great problem," she said, with a sigh.

"Yes," he answered, heartily. "One of the most urgent and important questions of the day." She looked up at him uneasily; he looked down tenderly and continued: "So urgent that I long to have it settled in the little time left before the train goes."

"Oh!" she said. "You don't realize how seriously and earnestly one should think it over."

"Yes, I do," he answered. "I myself have pondered on it long and carefully."

"So," she said, "you had to argue yourself into it, to work yourself up to believing you cared for me? This really is as keen as in Boston. Come, let's go and get warm."

They walked on in silence toward the hotel. As they crossed the platform and picked their way among the boxes and bundles a man who was busied with a paste pot looked up with an amused smile at their solemn progress. She caught it.

"Evidently he is being labeled," she said, inwardly.

"Yes," he answered, "except me. Am I to be tagged, 'rejected' or 'accepted'?"

She stood still and looked at him with indignant contempt.

"Your train leaves so soon perhaps I had better say good-bye here; you must have some final arrangements to make. I hope it will not be too windy for a pleasant trip back to New York. Good-bye."

He took her extended hand. "As you say," he answered, "we must make some final arrangements. You know I love you? Will you marry me?"

"Can't you see how incompatible our natures are?" she cried. "I am cold and warm-hearted, and you so flippant and cold."

The man among the boxes grew interested. He chose a box nearer them for his next label.

She lowered her voice. "Do you know," she asked, "that you are still holding my hand?"

"Yes," he said. "I know it, though I am so cold and indifferent. Will you marry me?"

The train bell rang. "They must have changed the time," she said. "Run or you will be left!"

As the forlorn little train pulled out they walked down to the beach.

"You will have to wait for tonight's train and won't that make you miss your boat. How about those poor girls and eczema?"

"They will have to get on without me, poor things," he said. "But it is the patients who have eczema, you know. Perhaps I shall stay over Sunday now."

She looked at him with delighted eyes. "What!" she said. "Two whole days for us to be happy in!"—Katherine Bates, in Kate Fields' Washington.

One of the old castles of northern England visitors are shown two rooms which are connected with each other by a singular mechanism. Each room is adjoined by an alcove, used as a sleeping apartment, and the floors of the adjoining alcoves turn on a pivot in the center of the partition wall. This ingenious device was the invention of one of the ancestors of the present proprietor, who was somewhat of a fan-fancying and great pleasure in frightening and mystifying his guests. When one had gone to bed in the green room and the other in the blue the floors were turned on their pivots and on awakening the visitor found himself in strange quarters with clothes that were not his own. It is said that this fan-fancying lord had a rich inheritance by thus disturbing the restful moments of a wealthy aunt, who never forgave the trick her nephew played upon her.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Big Story. The following story, the work of an imaginative correspondent, comes from Colorado: "Two hunters, coming to the edge of a glade, saw sixty-five bears in consultation. One was lying bound with grapevines, two were watching over him and another was making a speech. Presently the big bear stopped talking and all the sixty-three growled an assent. Some of the bears threw a gravevine loop around the erring bear's neck, led him to a limb, threw the vine over and six bears walked away with it. In ten minutes the bear was dead, and the others went solemnly away. The hunters secured the lynched bear's skin without a bullet hole in it by way of proof."—N. Y. World.

ALL OVER.

The young woman sat by the window looking out into the snowy air dreamily, when her reverie was disturbed by an elderly woman coming in.

"Oh," said the visitor, "excuse me. I didn't know you were absented."

"Come in," responded the dreamer, extending her hand. "I am glad to see you."

"But why are you so pensive? You look as if your best friend had died. What is the matter?"

The young woman drew her handkerchief hastily across her eyes.

"Ah," she sighed, "Harry and I!—The older woman dropped her hands in her lap in a hopeless, despairing fashion.

"Don't tell me," she interrupted, "that you and Harry have quarreled?"

"The end has come," to all our moonlight drives, to the tender whisperings beneath the magnolia trees, to the boxes of caramels and the baskets of flowers, to the sweet nothings in the conservatory, to the verses he wrote me, to the rivalries and jealousies of sweetheart days, to the—"

"Say no more!" exclaimed the older woman, determined to set matters right. "What have you two done? Tell me anything."

The girl came over and laid her head on the other's shoulder.

"We were married this morning at 10 o'clock," she whispered, and the older woman's hand fell helpless once more.—Detroit Free Press.

A Leader.

Since its first introduction, Electric Bitters has gained rapidly in popular favor, until now it is clearly in the lead among pure medicinal tonics and alteratives—containing nothing which permits its use as a beverage or intoxicant, it is recognized as the best and purest medicine for all ailments of stomach, liver or kidneys—it will cure sick headache, indigestion, constipation, and drive malaria from the system. Satisfaction guaranteed with each bottle or the money will be refunded. Price only 50c. per bottle. Sold by Wm. Cohen.

BETTER TIMES AHEAD.

"The year 1893 stands unique in its gloom, its disappointment and its failure to give in any one of its months even a spasmodic promise of more hopeful and happy conditions.

"There has been no general bankruptcy of mills, factories, furnaces or mines. The markets are becoming empty and need replenishing. The floors of the mills are swept clean of stock. As soon as it is decided in 1894 what will be the policy of the government on the tariff there will be an immediate and universal resumption of business, especially if the country is not compelled to adjust its business to radical changes in the tariff.

"The enormous accumulation of unemployed capital will seek some avenue for investment and return, and that will give corresponding employment. Renewed business will furnish increasing traffic to the railways, both passenger and freight, and will improve their earnings.

"The year 1894 will certainly be an enormous improvement on 1893, because this country cannot be kept standing still nor the pace of its progress long diminished.—Chauncey Dewey.
