THOMAS EDISON'S LATEST.

He Has Conceived the Plan to Make Houses While You Wait.

Although the last few years have witnessed no especially startling evidence of his inventive genius, the American people have been long accustomed to anticipate his extraordinary announcements from the laboratory of Thomas A. Edison. His latest invention has been no exception to this rule.

Mr. Edison proposes to construct eight and ten story steeling houses out of concrete at a cost of from five to six hundred dollars, while the same structures, with the use of brick, lumber or other building material would necessitate the expenditure of from ten to twenty five thousand dollars. His plan contemplates the pumping of concrete into pyramidal metallic molds, made into sections, easily transported and put together with little delay in the form and proportion of the structure desired. Three or four days will be required for the composition to harden, when the molds will be removed and the electrician and plumbers and painters.

He has made experiments on a small scale demonstrating the feasibility of the project, and has been assured by architects and builders of practical experience that there are no reasons why the plan should not be a success. However, as is natural, other experts of equal capability manifest skepticism—Atlanta Constitution.
