SELECT YOUR WIFE WITH CARE.

Do Not Marry Any Woman Simply Because She Has Money.

In selecting a wife many mengo on the principle that, it being a matter of small consequence, almust any young thing will do Thists a great mistake.

The careful man, even in details like this, will still be governed by proper circumspection.

There are various kinds of wives to be had for the asking.

The display wife is extensively used in this country. She is well made, stylish, ready in social emergencies and gives much pleasure in showing her around. Under cover she is disappointing, and is apt to run up bills, but for certain purposes is in large demand.

The domestic wife sews and mends nicely, makes mustard plasters and griddle-cakes, is a poor cloak model, saves money, raises children and is useful in illness.

The literary wife reads, writes and talks. She entermins people you hate, gives functions you dispise, makes cozy corners and trouble

The economical wife makes over her own clothes, starves you nearly to death, and saves enough moncy so that you can have a good time with her successor-if you're lucky enough to have one. The extravagant wife gives you a good time at twice what it's worth.

In selecting a wife always, of course, pick out your opposite. If you have a large, generous, wholesouled nature, that loves company and is fond of travel, stag parties and demijohns, marry a combination cook, housekeeper and trained nurse. Some one should watch the home.

If you are a mean, contemptible, petty, niggardly human shrimp, marry a lovely, sweet, patient, deserving womanly woman. Her character will be developed by suffering, thus giving you the opportunity to do some good.

The department at Washington once received a cigar box full of money which had been sent. from Philadelphia with the necessary affidavir showing that it had been inside a poorly constructed safe and had been burned to the condition in which it was forwarded. Evidently with the idea that the original package ought not to be broken, the sender inclosed the charred pieces with some silver coins which had also been in the badly burned safe. In its passage through the mails the heavy silver was shaken through the charred bills till there was hardly a piece left the size of

When the Pilgrim's years have multiplied and as his locks grow white, He prays to be a child again for just a single night. The road o'er which his feet have trod is rough and hard and steep, And when the eventide draws ticar, and shadows round him creep, He seeks for refuge on the breast of her who gave him birth. Where, once in innocence enshrined, he dwelt with childish mirth-Look up; O child, behold the dawn, God's years have just begun: The whirl of time is but a span, but lives forever run. See you the vista by the way, the verdure on the hills? Are not the likes just as sweet beside the sparkling rills? Do not the sunbeams paint the eve with colors of pure gold ? Is not the sapphire of the sky as brilliam as of old Does not the moon peep thro' the clouds and hide from lovers' view, Just in the same old fashioned way it always used to do? Are not the songs of birds as sweet as those they used to sing Do not the jewelled stars illume the palace of the King? Whose footsteps on the sands of time have led thy journey's way? Whose bleeding hands once cleared the path thro' night and storing day? What if the llowing river's brink in shadows deep is dressed, Tis but the yeil that hides from view Elysian heids of rest, There thou shalt be a child again not for a single mghi, But ever, the eternal's child, amidst the living light
