"It Was the Man Who Gave His Life For Me." There was a woman in the city of Brooklyn alone with her baby in the second story of a tenement house. She needed some things at the store, so leaving her baby asleep in the cradle she went out to get them. When she was going home she heard the gallop of horsehoofs on the pavement, and wondered, as she saw the fire engines go by, where the fire was this time, but as she came around the corner slie saw that it was berhouse that was on fire. Throwing her basket into the street she man as fast us she could and would have rushed into the burning building, but the chief pushed her back. But she cried, "My baby is asleep on the second floor." The chief, however, said, "It means death to enter the building." Then one of the firemen stepped forward and said that he thought he could save the child. The chief pushed him back as he did the woman and said that it meant death to enter the building, but the fireman said, "I have a little child at home, suppose it were mine; may 1 try to save this baby?" And the chief said, "Go," Up the creaking stairs he went, around the corner and there found the child. He took it in his arms and started back, but just then there was a crash and half of the floor and the stairs went down, and left him without a window on his side. So he called to the men outside, "Can you hear me?" and they said, "Yes." "I cannot save myself, but I think I can save the baby; I will throw it through the window on the other side of the room. Catch her in your net." True to his aim the baby went through the window and was caught safely in the net, while the fireman went down with the burning huilding.

Twenty years later a man was wandering in one of the cemeteries of Brooklyn. He saw a young lady bending over a grave, and around the feet of the statue of a fireman which was there she placed a wreath of flowers. The man came near and asked if it were her father and she said, "No," and he asked her if it were her
