Pompeii.

An English writer, speaking of Pompeii, says: "One house in Pompeii had evidently been in a state of repair when the volcano storm buried it. Painters and decorators and cleaners were masters of the situation. The household gods were all in disorder, and the family, if not put out of town, must have been undergoing that condition of misery which springs cleaning and other like infection invariably entail. Painters, pots and brushes and workmen's tools, were scattered about. Tell tale spots of whitewash seared wall and floor. Such domestic implements as pots and kettles had been bundled up in a corner all by themselves, and the cook was nowhere. Dinner, however had not been forgotten. A solitary pot stood simmering (if it ever did simmer) on the stove; and (start not, for it is true,) there was a bronze dish in waiting before the oven and on the dish a sucking pig already to be baked. But the oven was already engaged with its full complement of bread, so the sucking pig had to wait. And it never entered the oven, and the loaves were never taken out till after sojourn of seventeen hundred years! They had been cooking ever since November 23, A. D. 79. M. Florelli has them now in his museum at Pompeii, twenty one of them rather hard of course, and black, but perfectly preserved."

Dr. Burrows, of Louisville, Ky., has been called to one of the Richmond, Va., churches. It is thought he will accept.

The Paris exposition is a financial failure. Receipts for entrance up to the 4th of September amounted to 7,412,219 francs.

Gen. Grant, in a recent business letter, says: "Had I gone out of office at the end of four years, when my salary was $25,000 a year, I should have been compelled to sell something, to have carried me out of Washington; but with my private income and increased salary, I came out of the eight years free from debt, and without having incurred any loss anywhere in speculation.—Standard.
