TO THE PUBLIC.

When the EDITOR of this paper arrived here, on his way to Fayetteville, and found that town had been preoccupied by a printer, us induced to commence a paper here; Il not fay, upon a positive premise of a number of subscribers; but, certes, that of a strumber whom be made up in the course of a few months after his commencement of fuch an undertaking -In this hope and expectation, he published Tax Wat-MINGTON CHRONICLE; and though upwards of three months have now elapfed, yet his fubfeription lift contains very hitle more than bail the specific number mentioned previous to his commencement-which number he confidered necessary for the support of a paper. And of these, a confiderable part have not complied with the terms of contract; namely, that of paying their balf year's subscription in advance.

Here it may not be amils to remark, that had he nor brought with him a fum of money and a flock of printing paper, The Wilmington Chronicle would, ere now, have ceafed to ex-ift, for want of the necessary funds to carry it on.

In circumstances like these, it is best to be can-did and explicit :- and therefore he sees it incumbent on him to declare, that rocaiti existence to the completion of the term of fix months, wow entirely depends on the promptitude with which those indebted to him for advertifing, fubliciption, printing work, and books, discharge their respective accounts. [Note, None of these (except in some sew cases advertising) were ever intended to become BOOK DEB; a.] Although the fum due from any individual is but trifling, yet the aggregate will form a fum fufficient to enable him to fulfil all his engagements with faithfulucis and punctuality. In judification of himfelf, for this address, he thall only observe, that several of his accounts have been repeatedly prefented, or ealled for, in vain; and as the business will but afford him to keep either a clerk or damer be oblice made of the other alternative be had, than, in filence, to exhault his present stock of paper, and fo let the CHRONICLE die a natural deathor thus publicly address those indebted to him, for the means of procuring a fresh supply. o rhofe fubfcribers and others, whofe punctual payments have thus far enabled him to keep his buliacis affort, he tenders his belt and fincereft acknowledgments.

N. B. If under a disappointment of his hopes and expectations, he should meditate a removal, at the expiration of his fix months, he truffs to the caudour of the public, that it will be attributed to the true cause, berein mentioned, rather than to any inordinate defire of change. October 8.

EIGHT DOLLARS REWARD.

AN-AWAY from the fubferiber, an ap-A prentice to the printing bufines, named JAMES PAXTON. He is near 18 years of age, middling stature, thin face and person, complexion remarkably pale, dark eyes, a down look; walks with his knees bent. He took away with him a variety of clothes. The above reward for apprehending him is offered, not that he is worth half the mobey to his mafter, but because he is a notorious villain, that should be brought to condign punishment.

DENJ. FRANKLIN BACHE.

Mafters of veffels and others are forbid harbouring or carrying hint off, at their peril.

Upon his being ludged in any earl in the United States, the above reward will be paid, and any resionable expence incurred chear-fully allowed.

It is hoped that printers, for the fake of the trade, will give no shelter or encouragement to the runaway. He will promise fair, but it will be to their ultimate advantage not only not to employ him, but to bring him to the punishment his villany deferves.
