VIEWES AND REVIEWS.

Ten thousand Louisiana refugees have returned to New Orleans since the overthrow of the carpet-baggers' regime.

The tickets for the Paris exhibition are to be issued by the Bank of France. Season subscriptions will be, through little books, purchasable for $20.

The oldest royal princess in Europe is Caroline of Denmark, who has just completed her eighty-fourth year. She is the great-great-granddaughter of George II, of Britain.

English is the court language of Germany. It is a proud moment when a Briton or American, visiting the palace, is saluted with "Dot vos a poety splentit morning, ain't it?"

The South has had the Speakership of the national House of Representatives for forty-six years, in the forty-four Congresses that have been held, the first being Macon of North Carolina, and the last James L. Orr, of South Carolina.

Petersburg, Va., claims to have been hugely benefited by the International Bazaar celebration held there last May. Upward of $200,000 have been invested in farms in the neighborhood, and immigration is on a most encouraging scale.

A large number of elegant barroom frequenters in Richmond, Va., carry ready-made drinks in their pockets since the raise in prices inaugurated by the bell-punch tax, and the home-bottle is patronized nearly as much as during the war times.

The Texans are anxious to try their hand at war with Mexico. Two thousand States volunteers are enrolled and ready to commence work at the word "go." No need of United States forces for Texas—merely given her permission take care of herself.

The exportation from Russia of sheepskins and pelisses has been forbidden because the Government, observing the increase in the exports of these articles, supposed they were being bought up for the use of the Turkish troops during the winter campaign.

The widow of the late Duke Galliera of Genoa, is employing part of her immense wealth in building two magnificent hospitals for that city. Her husband, before his death, gave $4,000,000 toward remodeling the port, and this work is now rapidly progressing.

An old, paralyzed Indian walks about the streets of Austin, Nev., between two poles that are fastened at his side and drag on the ground behind him. Without them he would fall backward, but with their bracing from behind, he is able to get along very well.

King Alfonso proposes to convoke the Spanish Cortes in January, in order to ask for a subsidy, as he has not money enough to get married on. His bride has more than enough for both, but his Castilian blood will not allow him to approach her as an impetuous bridegroom.

One of the swindlers who advertise remedies for consumption free of cost but with pretended disinterestedness offer to send the ingredients for $3, has been exposed in Philadelphia. His room was littered with letters that had enclosed money, and two women were hard at work getting circulars and packages of the nostrum ready for the mail.

The peculiar wickedness of the swindle lay in the character of the mixture sent, of which a physician said: "This wonderful remedy, is virtually hasbeesh, the primary effect of which is exhilarating, but its continued use is highly injurious and debilitating. The system of a weakly patient once accustomed to its use must have it, or, ceasing to use it, will rapidly fail. In other words, its habitual use is almost, if not quite, as pernicious as the opium habit."

The French Government is very shrewd in its action regarding the shipment of petroleum to its shores. In order to encourage domestic manufacture, a heavy import tax was levied some time ago upon refined oil, while the crude petroleum is permitted to pass into the country free of duty. In consequence, oil refineries have sprung up all over France, and the export of crude petroleum to that country has increased wonderfully during the past six months. Three years ago the shipments to Antwerp were greater than to any other foreign port, but at present the French have largely the advantage in the raw product. Spain, Italy, and Portugal are purchasing largely of the French refined oil, which is said to cost them less than the American. The expense of labor and fuel is less in France than here, and French chemists claim to have discovered cheap means of deodorizing and purifying the oil unknown to our refiners.

CUSTER AND THE BATTLE OF THE ROSEBUD.

Through the enterprise of the New York Herald the truth is at last known in regard to the battle of the Rosebud, where the lamented Custer and his 250 brave comrades perished.

If Sitting Bull is to be believed in his account of the battle which he gave to the New York Herald correspondent, Reno, after his inglorious retreat across the little Big Horn and up on the summit of the bluffs overlooking the valley, where he entrenched himself, had nothing confronting him but squaws and superannuated old men and children; the warriors had all gone to meet Custer in his attack upon the rear of their camp, some two or three miles distant.

Sitting Bull thinks, as did all of his Chiefs, that Reno only had a handful of men, consequently they put the squaws and old men to keep up a sort of desultory fire on him, while the Indian warriors all went to attack Custer, when the truth is, that Reno had five companies of men, his force being equal to that which General Custer had with him, and yet he remained there with his whole command, under the fire of squaws and old men, within hearing of the fire of Custer, and failed to make one movement towards his relief.

The account of the battle, as furnished by Sitting Bull and published in the Herald, relieves Gen'l. Custer from any blame of rashness; his whole plan showed that of an experienced Indian fighter, and the disposition of his forces, was that of an able General; and had Maj. Reno carried out his General's command's theory would have been different. Custer's plan was for Reno to charge in front while he with the balance of the command attacked them in rear. Reno commenced the attack, but soon became panic-stricken and beat a hasty retreat with his men to the summit of the bluffs above mentioned, while the gallant Custer trusting to the fealty of his officers, and the courage of his men, never for one moment doubting that his instructions would be carried out, charged right into the enemy's camp and in doing so, alas! rode right down into the valley of death.

Gen'l. Custer it seems wore his hair long in defiance; which was a standing challenge to the red man, come and take my scalp if you can! The Indians had a great respect for the brave General whom they called Long Hair. The following is Sitting Bull's account of Custer's end, to the same correspondent. The correspondent questioned him:

"Did you hear from your people how he died? Did he die on horseback?"
"No. None of them died on horseback."
"All were dismounted?"
"Yes."
"And Custer, the Long Hair?"

THE LAST TO DIE.
"Well, I have understood that there were a great many brave men in that fight, and that from time to time, while it was going on, they were shot down like pigs. They could not help themselves. One by one the officers fell. I believe the Long Hair rode across once from this place down here (meaning the place where Tom Custer's and Smith's companies were killed) to this place up here (indicating the spot on the map where Custer fell), but I am not sure about this. Any way it was said that up there, where the last fight took place, where the last stand was made, the Long Hair stood like a sheaf of corn with all the ears fallen around him."

"Not wounded?"
"No."
"How many stood by him?"
"A few."
"When did he fall?"
"He killed a man when he fell. He laughed."
"You mean he cried out?"
"No, he laughed; he had fired his last shot."
"From a carbine?"
"No, a pistol."
"Did he stand up after he first fell?"
"He rose upon his hands and tried another shot, but his pistol would not go off."

"Was any one else standing when he fell down?"
"One man was kneeling, that was all. But he died before the Long Hair. All this was far up on the bluffs, far away from the Sioux encampments. I did not see it. It is told to me. But it is true."

NOT SCALPED.
"The Long Hair was not scalped?"
"No. My people did not want his scalp."
"Why?"
"I have said; he was a great chief."

WASHINGTON LETTER.
WASHINGTON D. C. Nov. 16, 1877.

The delegates authorized by the Republican caucus of last Saturday to confer with the President, explain the drift of sentiment as elicited at that meeting and to report to their associates the spirit in which their suggestions were received, do not appear by current reports and street gossip, to have been given any reason to suppose that the President will be much influenced relative to appointments and dismissals from office by the information imparted. He is understood to have said, substantially, that he felt it incumbent on him to exercise his own judgment in the premises and that Senators must use their own discretion in the confirmation or rejection of his appointees; that in his appointment of Democrats to office he had had regard to the reconciliation of the different sections and the interests of the service; that, in his opinion, the wisdom of his selections had been indicated so far as opportunity had been offered to test them, and that he could not consistently with his conceptions of his duty, withdraw those determined on. The general impression appears to be that the recognized leaders of the party, including such men as Hamlin, Edmunds and others equally orthodox, were rather cavalierly received, entertained and dismissed; and as though he thought he might have been misunderstood, or had not made known his determination with sufficient emphasis, he immediately sent to the Senate the name of one Mr. Lawrence, a Democrat and ex-Confederate who don't believe in "erring brothers," as Collector of the port of New Orleans. Senators generally observe a dignified silence; but every one interested feels that the very atmosphere is permeated with a subtle something, that leads every one instinctively to put themselves in an attitude of defense though no enemy is visible, or to seek the most convenient shelter from a storm that seems imminent, though to the ordinary observer the heavens were never more serene. It is safe to predict that neither Mr. Lawrence nor Mr. Keed, the Toledo Postmaster, who is alleged to have secured his appointment through a bargain with Stanley Matthews and through a most flagrant violation of the programme which it was announced would guide the President in his reform appointments to the civil service, will be unanimously confirmed.

There is no mistaking Mr. Conkling's purpose to antagonize the Administration. He is reported to have formally requested Mr. Sherman to inform his Committee as to the nature of the charges against the New York Custom House officers now under sentence of dismissal and to have added that it has satisfactory evidence that they have efficiently and faithfully performed their duties. It is the understanding that of the nominations before his Committee those not alleged to be inconsistent with Mr. Hayes' civil service reform rules, are given out from time to time, or otherwise obnoxious to the majority, will be reported favorably; the others will be allowed to sleep in the Committee Room and lapse with the session, when they will become void. Mr. Hilliard's nomination, before Mr. Hamlin's committee, is another of those destined to this fate, it is thought. But if reported, it will be with the recommendation that it be not confirmed.

The Senate yesterday passed the Army Bill with the proviso for sending four regiments of cavalry to Texas stricken out, and the numerical strength restored to 25,000. It is the prevalent impression that the House will recede, especially as the Democratic lawyers of the Senate are said to have been of the opinion that the clause relative to the cavalry was clearly unconstitutional, infringing, as it did, on the President's prerogative as Commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy. The Naval deficiency bill was also passed. The House Foreign Relations Committee yesterday agreed to report Hewitt's Paris Exposition joint resolution favorably, with amendments. It accepts the invitation to France and empowers the President to appoint a Commissioner-General at $5,000 and 20 subordinates at $1,000 each.

Financial speeches were the order of the day in the House but only Mr. Kelley's attracted much attention. The Record is fearfully burdened with them this morning.

GURGE
Obstructing Nature,
Instead of fading her in her efforts to recuperate, is obviously not the way to get well when one is sick. Yet this is precisely the course pursued—of course unwittingly—by persons who are continually dosing themselves with powerful mineral drugs for some malady with which they are afflicted. Such baneful medicaments rather tend to retard recovery than to hasten it. How much more sensible are they who employ the gently acting but thoroughly efficient restorative, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which, unlike the drugs referred to, is eminently wholesome and safe; and, instead of injuring, improves the tone of the stomach and recreates health and vigor in the broken down system. Indigestion, liver complaint, constipation, kidney and bladder ailments, and rheumatism, yield to its corrective influence, and it is the remedy and preventive par excellence for intermittent and remittent fevers and other disorders bred by miasma tainted air and water. It is, moreover, a superb appetizer.
