THE HAYES AND CONKLING WAR.

The Washington correspondent of the Nashville American gives, in the following extract, a very clear, interesting and apparently reliable account of the situation as it stands between the Senatorial Radicals and the administration:

At the caucus which the Republican Senators held on Saturday last, it was decided by a substantial majority vote, but not until after a prolonged warfare of words, to appoint a committee to wait upon the President and demand from him a plain square answer, whether or not he intended to continue the old custom of consulting Republican Senators as to his appointments in their respective States, or whether he purposed to carry out literally his professions and take the patronage out of their hands.

The committee appointed waited on the President early this week. Their conference was long but highly unsatisfactory, at least to the Republican Senators. The President was suave, bland, conciliatory; trusted there would be no serious disagreement between him and the Senators; protested he was still true to his Republicanism; hoped they would see the wisdom of his policy and acquiescence in it, etc.

But when he was forced to the point—the only point that the Republican Senators have ever really cared a pin about—when they insisted that he should say whether or not he would leave the patronage of their States in their hands, as it has been heretofore, he retreated behind his regulation breastworks—the Cincinnati platform and his letter of acceptance—said plainly he could not give up the line of policy he had mapped out, and declined flatly to promise what they wanted. That was his protocol. The declaration of war followed close after.

Wednesday night Conkling called his committee—that on commerce, together. By a chance, which, perhaps, was provided for when Conkling was made chairman of that committee, the appointments in which Conkling is most interested, the appointments which Everts controlled, the appointments which have most incensed the proud heart of Roscoe, to wit the appointments of the Collector and Naval Officer at New York, had been, in accordance with the rules of the Senate, referred to Mr. Conkling's committee—that on commerce. Therefore, when the President had declined positively to do as he was bid in the matter of the patronage, Lord Roscoe called his committee of commerce together. He explained to them that the reason they had not been called together sooner, was because there were objections to some of the appointments. They all knew very well that the real reason was because Mr. Conkling had not been fully convinced until then that the President would really brave his Lordship's wrath.

But the explanation, neither so wide as a door, nor so deep as a well, was enough. Like Mercutio's wound, it served. Just what explosives were left in that committee room on Wednesday night, the world may never know. One decision reached has transpired. The nominations which were unobjectionable were agreed to; those which were objectionable—and they included the New York nominations—were not agreed to and have not been reported.

The next and most significant step was taken yesterday as announced in these dispatches last night. The Senate Committee on Commerce sent a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury asking what charges, if any, have been preferred against the present incumbents of the New York offices. Whether there is any proof that they have not been faithful officers, and if so, what; and the committee wrote further that they were informed that the officers had been good and faithful servants and that no charges had been preferred against them. This is Conkling's declaration of war. It must be admitted that he has chosen his battlefield with much cunning, and planned the opening of the campaign with much skill. The President is in a hard dilemma. Out of the kindness of his heart, and to assuage the pain of removal from the fat service of the Government, the President gave all the New York officers whom he left out in the cold a clean bill of health and a certificate of good character at the same time he gave them the grand "bounce." Conkling has this ammunition in his arsenal. So far as known no charges of any sort of malfeasance have been proven against the New York officials. The President's first thesis on civil service reform declares that faithful servants shall be retained.

Conkling has that ammunition in his arsenal. It is already apparent that he has the Senate committee on commerce at his back. The nominations cannot get to the Senate until the committee pleases. The advantage of position is all with the Senator. He can withhold the nominations or report them to the Senate adversely if he sees their rejection, and, worst of all, he can say I fail to report these nominations, or I report them to the Senate adversely if he is sure of their rejection, and, worst of all, he can say I failed to report these nominations, or I report them adversely, Mr. President, because you have violated your own theory of civil service reform in attempting to remove the present incumbents without cause. The argument holds good as to any appointments to the same offices, and so long as no new appointments are confirmed the old incumbents hold over. It looks as though the President was hoist upon his own petard.

A Norristown boy who found a pocket book containing eighty-one dollars, and returned it to the owner, refused a reward of five cents for his trouble, explaining that many a man had been ruined by suddenly becoming rich.

BLAINE'S HEALTH.

The Springfield Republican says there seems to be no reason to doubt that Mr. Blaine is in a very critical condition. He has grown worse since he went to his Angutsa home a fortnight ago, has been confined to his bed, denied to callers and finally attacked with dysentery, which left him so weak a few nights ago that it was feared he was going to die. The last two years have proved a terrible strain on both his mind and body, and there are abundant signs that, however completely he may seem to recover from his present attack, the days of his old activity are over, or, if they are resumed, are liable to be ended very suddenly and finally.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON D. C. Nov. 24, 1877.

Thursday saw something new in the Senate. Instead of the insolent "two thirds" vote which in the past has made all sorts of unconstitutional legislation possible, or even the more moderate majority of the past few years, the Republicans found themselves in an actual minority on a party question. Skillfully shifting the question to one of adjournment, they succeeded in getting a tie vote, and then the presiding officer voting with his party, the Senate adjourned. It was well understood, however, that if the plain issue between Butler and Corbin, of South Carolina, had at any time been presented, Butler would have received the necessary votes to secure admission. It required all the skill of Edmunds and Conkling, and the use of tactics rarely resorted to in the Senate, to prevent such a vote. The adjournment is until Monday, 26th, when the question will be up again.

One of the complications of the case is that Conover, Republican, who will vote to admit Butler, is pledged to vote for Kellogg, Republican, of Louisiana. So if the Republican Senators can get Kellogg's case before the Senate in advance of Butler's, and if Sharon, absent Republican, can get here so as to vote Monday, as is expected, Kellogg can be seated and Butler kept out. The political complexion of the Senate for the next fifteen months—till March 1879—depends on the result of next week's vote.

It will, of course, be gratifying to get control of the Senate, but I confess to a regret that better material than Conover and Patterson could not be employed in securing the change. Yesterday the House adjourned till next Tuesday. Its last act was to pass the bill repealing the resumption act. On this the vote was 133 to 120, the majority being less than was expected. Of those voting for repeal 105 were Democrats and 28 Republicans. Against repeal there were 30 Democrats and 90 Republicans. The bill goes to the Senate, where almost certainly it will die—either smoothed in Committee or be killed on the final vote after being reported by the Committee.

The silver remonetization bill, passed in the House and reported with amendments by the Senate Committee to which it was referred, may possibly get through that body in time for the House to act on the amendments but it is not likely. At a Republican Senatorial caucus held on yesterday (Friday) it was resolved to have all the nominations of Mr. Hayes reported by the several Committees to the Senate for confirmation or rejection during the special session. If any exceptions are made to this they will be very few.

Your readers will remember that I have given considerable attention to what has seemed to me an effort of speculators and adventurers to push the country into a war with Mexico. There was never before so much reason to fear their success as at this time. Aiding their unscrupulous efforts is the silly delusion, on the part of a class of Mexicans, that the people and the Government of the United States are afraid to fight! This inconceivable folly is said to have a place in the minds of intelligent and influential Mexicans, and is of course taken advantage of by the designing holders of "claims" against Mexico, and the equally unscrupulous people who covet the gold and silver mines of Northern Mexico. Both these classes see in a war the success of their schemes.

BOILED DOWN.

Chicago is to have a Democratic newspaper. Immigration is not as great this year as last. Verdi is Italian delegate to the Paris Exhibition.

Illinois has twenty-four female notaries public. The rag baby wants a silver dollar to put its teeth on.

Iowa has thus far expended $1,250,000 on her State Capitol. Cincinnati employs 24 colored teachers in its public schools.

The San Francisco News Letter, writing the biography of a fellow-citizen says: "Mr. Jones felodised this morning, successfully. He hymenated three years ago, and he will be sepulchered to-morrow."

At a little gathering the other evening a young man asked a young lady whether if his small brother was a lad he was not a ladder, and she kindly said she thought he must be, she could see through him so easily. It is very pleasant to be a young man.

"Now, young people" said a professor of natural history in his class, "now then as to hens. A hen has the capacity of laying just six hundred eggs and no more and she finishes the job in just about five years. Now, what is to be done with her after that? 'Cut off her head and sell her for a spring chicken!' exclaimed an urchin whose father had dealt in poultry.

New Internal Improvement Scheme.

Editor Review:—Brother Stallings of the Democrat has inaugurated a pet scheme of his own in a proposition to dig a ship canal from Fayetteville on the Cape Fear River to the Yadkin river at a point just below the North Carolina Rail Road. The distance is claimed to be seventy miles and the fall forty feet. He says no locks will be needed. His plan is to make the enterprise a State work and to construct it with convict labor. Compared with the trouble and cost brother Stallings contends that this internal improvement scheme is wise, practicable, and would be of incalculable benefit to Wilmington and the whole State. It is seldom that we have seen more sanguine views expressed of the feasibility of a project, and a richer coloring given of the magnificent results to flow from its completion than our sanguine brother gives in developing his scheme. Let it be considered and discussed. Agitation is the beginning of thought, and an essential means of arriving at the truth. We do not commit ourselves as yet upon this mammoth proposition. Let us have the judgment of our ditchers, farmers, and recognized canal diggers, before we allow any heated imagination or impulsive enthusiasm to commit us to its support. We would prefer the common sense decision of almost any one of the enterprising, intelligent and solid farmers upon this scheme or that other great scheme of constructing an inland water route between North East river and the Sounds of Pamlico and Albemarle, and on to Norfolk, than we would the opinion of any one outside of a thoroughly practical and scientific engineer. Science is nothing after all but common sense, and common sense, so often ridiculed and despised, is what has been in a majority of cases disregarded in the construction of the public works of North Carolina. Let us take facts and draw legitimate conclusions from them, and cease the common and unphilosophical methods of warming up our brains with theories and then strive, with arduo loco often blind, to bend facts to our own conclusion and prejudices, as arising from unsupported dogmas and theories. There is one consideration connected with Brother Stallings' theory which is pleasing. It is this, that if his proposed canal is ever dug it will be exclusively a North Carolina work and not be a drain, as are so many of our public works, of the life blood of the state into South Carolina and Virginia and other States. Put in regard to this proposition and to inland water routes generally of artificial construction, it will be of absorbing interest in the outset to enquire whether experience proves their ability to compete with railroads and ocean steamship navigation. Happily for the future of our State, and the good of our people, internal improvement, in the onward progress of knowledge, has never become reduced to science, (alas common sense, and, as such, every proposition for endorsement and aid must, as preliminary to substantial public favor and Legislative effort, pass through the trying ordeal of full investigation and fair, logical, approval. The Wilmington Journal.

THE PUBLICATION OF THE WILMINGTON JOURNAL will be resumed in the city of Wilmington, the initial number to be issued on the first Thursday in December.

As has always heretofore been the case with this staunch old weekly, the JOURNAL in politics will represent none but the soundest and truest Democratic principles, faithful to the traditions of that party, steady to its present principles and unforgetful of the great fraud by virtue of which a Republican administration assumes the duties of the position fairly won by the Democratic party.

Our market reports will be a prominent part of the paper and will present the most valuable points of transactions up to the very hour of going to press, while especial care and attention will be paid to the editorial, news and miscellaneous departments.

One of the most prominent features of the paper will be its agricultural department and on this, which will be placed in the hands of a gentleman well qualified to manage it, experience as well as care will be brought to bear.

The WILMINGTON JOURNAL will be published from the office of the DAILY REVIEW, every Thursday afternoon at $1.50 a year.
