A Sad Case.

The pathway of life abounds alike with flowers and thorns. Life is a variegated mixture of pain and pleasure, of joys and of sorrows. In a neighboring county there has just occurred another deplorable illustration of the truth of the well-known lines of the poet, that: "When lovely woman stoops to folly, And finds too late that men betray, What charms can soothe her melancholy, What art can wipe her guilt away?"

A few months ago a young woman of fine appearance, and evidently well-raised, got off the train at a depot near this city. She sought employment as a domestic and obtained it. Her story was intelligently told, and secured the favorable consideration of the family which took the stranger in.

Time passed on and she gave satisfaction. It was evident that she was enclente, and she had ready a plausible explanation for all. The time for her confinement approached. It was found necessary that new quarters should be obtained for this critical event. None of the neighbors were willing to take her on that condition, especially as she was a poor girl. A physician near by was sent for in this emergency, as she was already sick with pneumonia. He went and administered to her necessities day after day. During this time appeal after appeal was made to him by the girl and the family to take the patient to his own premises during her confinement, as she had not elsewhere to lay her head. It was a call of mercy and charity that the true physician always heeds. He took her to his home, but not until he had searched the bottom facts of the woman's history. In that desire to conceal her shame, which generous men forgive, she had until then misled the family as to her history and the true cause of her condition. She told the physician that she belonged in another neighboring county, and was the daughter of respectable parents, whose names were given. It was found also that she had clandestinely left home, that none of her relatives knew of her whereabouts, and that, under promise of marriage, she was the victim of the seductive appetites and criminal passions of man. She gave the name of her seducer. Her statement was the same old tale of seduction, desertion, child-birth. The pneumonia continued, causing premature labor, and both combined were too much for her powers of endurance. She died under these vigorous assaults upon her mind, body and heart, and was kindly buried by the physician who had taken her in and used all his skill to save her. A living child is the fruit of this sorrowful case. This too remains in the hands of the same physician, and awaits the requisition of the nearest blood relatives, whose names are known. There are other interesting facts and circumstances connected with this painful affair, but we have already said enough. The father has been written to. He is, probably, a gentleman of high standing in his native county, and will, perhaps, marry after a while, become a pillar of the church, lead a virtuous life, rear a family of active boys and lovely girls, and may even, perhaps, represent his county in the Legislature, while the poor girl whom he ruined and betrayed sleeps in a disgraceful grave.

A Cotton Thief Caught.

A colored fellow by the name of Henry Hall was captured last night about 10 1/2 o'clock, by Capt. Buchan, of the British Barque North Carolina, and turned over to the police. The barque was lying out in the stream opposite the city, and Hall was caught on board of her by Capt. Buchan, and so were six bags which were just sufficient to hold a quantity of loose cotton that was on board the vessel. The fellow was seized and Capt. Buchan sent for a policeman, whereupon Hall took advantage of a favorable opportunity and sprang overboard and swam for the shore. A boat put out from the ship and he was overhauled and taken on board again and afterwards delivered into custody of a policeman. The case was called this morning before the Mayor and partially heard, but a full investigation was postponed until to-morrow. The peculiar phases of the affair are as follows: About two weeks since a bale of cotton was cut open and some of the staple stolen. Suspicion attached itself to the cook and he was discharged, and Capt. Buchan thinks that he and Hall were confederates. There is also a white boy on board who is probably concerned in the affair. He shipped at Demarara and Capt. Buchan promised his mother that he would return him to her in safety. Hence, instead of preferring charges against him, Capt. B. has given him a sound thrashing and has promised the Mayor that he shall not put his foot ashore while the vessel remains in port. Per contra, Hall says that he is innocent and that he can prove that the white boy came to him yesterday and told him that the cook wanted to see him and that his business aboard the ship last night at half-past 10 o'clock.
