From the United States Signal Office at this place we obtain the following report of the thermometer, as taken this "mora- ing at 7:31 o'clock : Augusta, Ga	tempts. To say that the character of the play is wholly suited to her would be to transcend truth, but that the part of Cath- arine and many of the scenes depicted are entirely in harmony with Madame Janauschek's school of acting is self-evi dent, and with the power peculiar to her the subject is grasped. The acting of Janauschek in the first and fitth acts is very grand aud full of expression; as re- gards her acting in the closing scene of act fifth, when Catharine learns that the Chevalier has gone forth to be shot, it would be difficult to express in words the intensity of the impression produced by the agony of grief and passion depicted, and throughout this scene and on to the close of the piece the feeling portrayed transcends description, so realistic was the effect produced."
