There is a perfect flood of blackberries and huckleberries in market now.

Bad weather this for drinking whiskey and then walking about in the sun.

The Board of County Commissioners meet in adjourned session this afternoon.

Fish were retailing yesterday afternoon from five to ten cents per bunch—and some of them were dear at that.

The frolicsome Spring chicken, almost as big as a mocking bird, wout, come down for less than 15 cents each.

Our city was visited by a splendid rain last night and the heart of the jovial trucker is gladsome and happy to-day.

The river is again very low and unless there were heavy rains last night in the interior boating will become difficult next week.

The Hibernian Association, we understand, have decided upon having an excursion down the river on the Fourth, on the steamer Gov. Worth. Further particulars will be given in a day or two.

Cantata of Esther.

Queen Esther will hold her court at Smithville in a few days. Boats will be chartered to convey persons wishing to go to Smithville to witness the cantata. A band of music and a general good time is anticipated. Particulars hereafter.

To St. James' Home

We are requested by His Honor the Mayor to state that for want of ballast the new sidewalk on Orange street to St. James' Home will necessarily be covered with sawdust. This, however, is only a temporary arrangement, for as soon as the ballast is received Mayor Fishplate will instruct the Chief of Police to have it laid on the walk as soon as it can possibly be done.

Non Est.

From private information received in this city yesterday we learn that the music master at St. Mary's, Raleigh, has skedaddled, but for what cause is not stated. There is to be a grand musical exhibition and entertainment there on Friday evening, and a dispatch has been sent here for the purpose of inducing some one of the musical professors in this city to go to Raleigh and take charge, temporarily, of the duties abandoned by the missing music master but with what success we have not yet learned.

The Rowing Race.

The rowing race on the river late yesterday afternoon between the crews of the White Swan and the Little Katie attracted a great deal of attention and excited much interest. The course was from Market Dock to a buoy opposite Kidder's mill and return, and the crews of the two boats went to exchange and repeat the course. An extended report of the race is crowded out by the press of other matter in our columns to-day and we can only give the result. The race was a very close one and the crew of the White Swan were declared the winners. The race was witnessed by crowds of spectators, among whom were many ladies.

A Reliable Article.

It is a pleasure to commend an article of a thoroughly reliable character, and we do not hesitate to do so in speaking of DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER, which an experience of over ten years convinces us is the best and most reliable baking powder in the market.

Mothers, Mothers, Mothers.

Don't fail to procure Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP for all diseases of teething in children. It relieves the child from pain, cures wind colic, regulates the bowels, and, by giving relief and health to the child, gives rest to the mother.

The Colonnade Hotel, Philadelphia, Pa., endorsed by eminent and distinguished visitors as a model establishment, will be an exception hereafter to the general complaint of high prices.

The Branch Artillery.

Somebody has written the Newbernian a very interesting sketch of Capt. Flanner's battery, known during the war at first as the Branch Artillery and afterwards as Latham's North Carolina Battery. The article is too lengthy for our columns or we would reproduce it here but we will, at all events, give a summary of the facts. The Company was recruited in Newbern in January, 1862, and named in compliment to Gen. L. O'B. Branch, its first Captain having been A. C. Latham. It was splendidly equipped, but the Company left their guns in the fight below Newbern, in the Spring of 1862, after a most gallant engagement. At Kinston they were again equipped and in May, 1862, shortly after Major Flanner joined it as a Second Lieutenant, it was ordered to Virginia, and very soon after arriving there was engaged in the fight at Hanover Court House where Branch's brigade, scarce 2,500 strong, held in check for twelve hours, Fitz John Porter's army of 30,000 men. Soon after this fight, the battery was attached to Stonewall Jackson's command and its history for the three years thereafter was a most brilliant one. It was finally surrendered with Lee's command, when its brave officers and men turned sadly homewards. Besides their scars and the memory of many hard-fought fields they brought but one trophy away, and that was the flag which had waved over their heads in a hundred fights and which itself bore evidence of the storm of shot and shell through which it had so often passed. That flag was never surrendered, but was worn by Capt. Flanner under his shirt on the long and weary journey home from Appomattox. This is a fact of which the correspondent of the Newbernian does not seem aware.

In December, 1863, Capt. Latham resigned and thereupon Lieutenant Juno E. Potts was promoted and served with much distinction as the Captain of the battery until Capt. Potts' young life fell a victim to the cause in the bloody fight at Spotsylvania, and from thence we will let the Newbernian's correspondent tell the tale which he does as follows:

After the death of Capt. Potts, May 8th, 1864, the battery passed under the command of now Capt. Henry G. Flanner, who handled it with the skill and intrepidity of his predecessors until the close of the war. As the evil days drew nigh and the murky clouds of despondency, unrelieved by the silver lining of hope, enshrouded all the horizon, as one by one our hopes proved futile, the battery lost none of its dash and daring, but bore itself as bravely as it did in the hey-day of its existence. Its guns were never silent, morning, noon or night, but on the outposts from Richmond to Petersburg, and from Petersburg to Richmond again, its mutterings and its grumbings made the air resonant; and thus from day to day it was ever up and doing till the last sad scenes around Appomattox, where the banner with the Southern Cross was furled and the star of the Confederacy that once set all the sky ablaze with its meteoric splendor, and electrified the world, set shrouded in gloom and pale as its fires forever. Here the remnants of these veterans of a hundred fields laid down their arms in good faith and turned with saddened hearts and feet that were weary, their faces towards where once were bright, smiling, happy homes, now alas! in the hands of the stranger, or, in many instances, marked by black, smoking ruins, or gaunt, spectre-like, cheerless chimneys, around which no more will prattle the artless child or doze the aged dame. Desolation, penury and want greeted them on every hand; with hearts injured to every fate their steps were as elastic and their hearts as proud as in the day when victory laurel wreathed their brows. The remembrance of their deeds of heroism and valor is a precious jewel, of which the hand of the victor cannot despoil us; and when their true history in the coming years shall be written, it will read more like a narrative of the days of "old romance" and will overshadow with the sublimity and grandeur of their valor and self-abnegation the hardships and sufferings of the Crusaders under Godfrey, or the daring of the Spaniards under Cortez.

The writer would state, that immediately after the battle of Hanover Court House in May 1862, Lieut. Samuel W. Latham tendered his resignation, and that in December 1863, Lieutenant John M. Perry was transferred to the ordinance department with the rank of Captain; hence the seniority of Capt. Flanner; he would also say that the Branch Artillery was more generally and familiarly known in the "Army of Northern Virginia" as "Latham's North Carolina Battery."

Grape Culture and Wine.

Mr. A. Speer, of New Jersey, one of the largest grape producers in the east, commenced but a few years ago in a small way, to make wine from currants, blackberries, and other fruits. He now controls large vineyards from which his famous Port Grape Wine is made, which chemists and physicians say rival the world for its beneficial effects on weakly and aged persons.

Dr. Patterson at Chapel Hill.

We clip from the special correspondent of the Raleigh Observer, from Chapel Hill, the following interesting report relative to the Baccalaureate Sermon delivered to the Graduating Class at the university on Sunday last:

The exercises of the week began yesterday with the Baccalaureate Sermon to the Graduating Class. For the last thirty years this sermon has been preached on Monday, but this year they have returned to the usage of the earlier days of the University, and had it on Sunday. The beautiful services of the Episcopal church were used, being conducted by the Rev. Joseph B. Cheshire, Jr., formerly of Tarboro, but now in charge of the church in this village. He is the son of the much loved rector of the Episcopal church at Tarboro. The choir, led by Mr. Wilson, a prominent member of the Baptist church, of this place, sang a voluntary and those hymns so dear to Christians of all denominations—the 139th, "Rock of Ages," and the 143rd, "Jesus, Saviour of my Soul." The Baccalaureate sermon was then delivered by the Rev. George Patterson, D. D., of Wilmington. All who know this learned gentleman can well believe that too much praise cannot be bestowed on it, and we feel sure that by those present with the most rapt attention and appreciation. The text chosen by this gifted divine was the 19th chapter of St. Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians, 24th verse: "So run that ye may obtain." In the first part of his sermon the preacher gave a short description of the Isthmian games. He alluded to the rules of preparation for the race, temperance in all things being one chief feature, and directed special attention to that singleness of purpose, with which the contestant in those games was moved, so that in that vast multitude of eager spectators on every side his eye saw only the distant goal. He then contrasted the zeal and energy of men of the world in the pursuit of secular employments with the spirit of carelessness and sloth which is too apt to characterize our religious life; and urged upon his hearers and especially upon those young men just going out from their college life to enter upon a wider field, that they should strive just as earnestly and perseveringly to serve God as they would strive for the highest earthly prize. The Isthmian crown was but a garland of pine leaves. All worldly objects, though good and proper in their place, and such as men ought to strive after with their might, are hardly more enduring than the pine leaves; the crown which is offered to those who faithfully serve their Heavenly Master is incorruptible and is not offered to one but all may hope to win it. Such a sermon cannot fail to do a great deal of good, and I congratulate the young gentlemen of the graduating class upon the happy selection they made of an orator, and it is sincerely to be hoped that the sermon will be published, for it would be a matter of regret for so masterly a production not to be preserved.

The Cadets at Fayetteville.

We have been favored with another communication from Fayetteville, giving on account of the doings of the cadets of the Cape Fear Military Academy in that city during the past few days. They were to have left Fayetteville this morning on the steamer Gov. Worth, and may be expected here to-night or early to-morrow morning, according to circumstances. But we will let our correspondent tell his own tale. He writes under date of yesterday, and says:

Our boys continue to enjoy themselves in the highest degree under the genial hospitality of the people of Fayetteville. I really, really, the palm for kindness and attention to strangers might be awarded this city. Yesterday afternoon, by invitation, the corps of cadets drilled with the two companies of this city, one of which, I understand, is the oldest military organization in the State, and perhaps, the second oldest in the United States. Major Burgess commanded the battalion. After a parade around the principal streets, and the execution of a few battalion movements, we were invited to a large table, where our boys did justice to a tub of iced lemonade, after which the battalion marched to the barracks of the cadets, where three cheers were given by the cadets for the two Fayetteville companies. Major Burgess, being called upon made a few happy remarks, closing with many thanks for the kindness we had received at the hands of the military.

Last night the dramatic entertainment was offered to the public, and was attended by a full and appreciative audience.

Some of the larger cadets, I am afraid, will prove unwilling to leave to-morrow as the fair sex seem, as usual, to have coiled a web around their hearts.

I am sure a no more successful and enjoyable excursion could possibly have been gotten up; and the smallest cadet can say boldly that he has had a "good time."

We leave on the Worth to-morrow morning, long to remember Fayetteville and her hospitable citizens.

Excursionists From Shelby.

An excursion party of about forty persons from Shelby arrived this morning and will remain in and about the city until Friday evening. The excursionists indulged in a trip on the steamer J. S. Underhill to the sea shore this morning.

Death of Capt. Peck.

We deeply regret to learn of the sudden death of one of the oldest citizens of Wilmington, Captain Thomas F. Peck, which occurred this forenoon on board the steamer J. S. Underhill, at the time en route for Smithville. There was a little family excursion among Capt. Peck's children and grandchildren to Smithville and he had been induced to accompany it, he being apparently in his usual health. There were also on board a number of the excursionists who arrived here this morning from Shelby. When about opposite Orton Capt. Peck attempted to descend from the upper deck and a gentleman near at hand noticing that he was faltering and about to fall sprang forward and caught him. He was carried into the cabin and a physician from Shelby, who was on board, examined his pulse and pronounced that life was extinct. He thinks that his death was almost instantaneous at the moment of attack. The Underhill then put about and came back to the city with the body and the afflicted relatives.

Capt. Peck was one among the very oldest of our citizens. He was a native of Milford, Conn., and came to Wilmington in 1821, where, with the exception of a few years spent by him in California, he has since resided. Had he lived until next September, he would have been 78 years old and possessed remarkable vitality for a man of his age. He was highly esteemed and the news of his death has been received here with profound regret.

Yachts and Yachting.

The sailing yacht Frolic, owned by Mr. Geo. D. Parsley of this city, left Masonboro Sound yesterday morning at 6 o'clock and headed for New Inlet with the following crew: Messrs. Juno Farrow, Walter L. Parsley, O. G. Parsley, Jr., Walter Talliferro, Martin Willard. Mr. Farrow acted as pilot, but who of the balance of the party was Captain, who Mate, Coxswain and so on we are not informed. But we have been told by one of the young gentlemen who was aboard that they experienced head winds and pretty rough weather, and shipped any quantity of seas; they finally, however, reached New Inlet about 1 o'clock and came to anchor close in shore where they remained until 6 o'clock yesterday evening waiting for the tide to rise sufficiently high to enable them to pass over the government works at the Inlet.

The Frolic reached here with her crew last night at half past eight, making the trip from New Inlet in two hours and a half—pretty good time. The young men who made the trip say—"it's a heap better for the boat to haul it overland from the Sound."

The Ripple, from Wrightsville, is expected to-day and then the fleet will be complete and ready for the grand Regatta that takes place here on the tenth—five days hence. There will be lots of fun and we expect there will be a lively Frolic too.

Accidentally Drowned.

We are sorry to learn that a young colored man by the name of Osborne Cowan, one who stood well with everybody, was drowned off the steamer A. P. Hart, about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, some fifteen miles above the city. The Hart was at the time on her regular trip to Fayetteville, having left the city somewhere after 2 o'clock, and Osborne was a deck passenger. At the time of the accident the boat was rounding a sharp turn in the river, known as The Elbow, and the unfortunate young man was seated on an empty flour barrel. The movement of the boat caused the barrel to roll overboard and with it went Osborne. He was a good swimmer but instead of making for the shore he swam towards the boat. Seeing this a gentleman on the boat called to him and told him to turn shoreward which he did, but soon after sank, it is supposed through exhaustion. As soon as possible the steamer was stopped and a boat was launched but by that time Osborne had disappeared.

The deceased has a very good character here and was well thought of by the white residents. He was one of the few colored Democrats in the city. He was 22 years old and was on his way to Fayetteville at the time of his death to take service with a lady there.

DIED.

Very suddenly, this morning, June 5th, in the 7th year of his age, Capt. THOMAS F. PECK, a native of Milford, Conn., but a resident of Wilmington since 1821. The funeral services will take place to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock from the residence of his son, Geo. A. Peck, to the First Presbyterian Church; from thence to Oakdale Cemetery.

Criminal Court.

The following cases have been disposed of in this Court to-day:

IN MEMORIAM.

Died, at her residence in Germantown, Pa., May 24th, Madame PAULINE CLEMENT. To many, whose eyes rest upon the above, will the old familiar name of their former teacher fall gently and sadly. Permit a grateful pupil to drop a tear upon the tablet of memory, for one whose career of usefulness here, in by-gone days, comes up before our mental vision in sad, yet pleasing remembrances of happy school days. "When we sported in that merry sunshine of our life, Sadness, a stranger to the heart, and cheerfulness, its gay inhabitant."

When with the usual waywardness of youth we rebelled against those strict ideas of propriety which were so characteristic of our venerable teacher, yet, on looking back from a maturer standpoint, through the long vista of by-gone years, we feel that it was a privilege to have been an inmate of her Seminary, for Madame Clement for four or five years conducted a Convent in this place, with the usual vicissitudes attendant upon establishing a school, and gained the appreciation of those who were with her long enough to realize that her great aim was the advancement of those in her charge. With the genial warmth of her sunny land, her kind heart was ever ready to feel for and assist those whom she thought worthy of her care, and her kindly feelings when called forth were evinced with a motherly tenderness not easily forgotten.

While ever ready to condemn and correct a misdemeanor, she was none the less active in bestowing her praises when deserved, and her hearty approval, when merited, was sufficient incentive for renewed energy. When the writer of this poor tribute stood a few seasons since and looked upon her for the first time in many years, the respect of childhood was only increased as we beheld the silvery hair, whitened by the frosts of the many winters which had elapsed, save which mark time seemed to have made but few ravages upon her familiar form. A devout Churchwoman, she wished all under her care to be governed by its precepts, which she strove to enjoin upon in one of her forgotten lessons to our youthful mind she sought to impress upon us the true version of that so oft misinterpreted word, Charity, and now that she no longer sees "through a glass darkly, but face to face," we trust that she is in the enjoyment of that "rest which remaineth for the people of God."
