WHAT WE NEED IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The year 1878 was one to be deplored by the agriculturists of North Carolina, and one that will be long remembered, especially in the eastern section as a year in which every effort to secure a good crop proved futile and resulted in a most disastrous failure. Of course the generally as cribed cause of the evil is attributed to the extreme drought of the early summer by which the upland crops were parched and ruined, and by the remarkably wet season which followed immediately after, swamping and destroying all the lowland crops. Added to this the extremely low prices which obtained in the markets for all the products of the farm, made the condition of the farmer truly despairing and almost hopeless. In most instances his labor was not only entirely thrown away, but he was left considerably in debt by his operations,

Now, while the above are the reasons for failure in the present condition of things, there are, in our opinion, methods by which much of the distress of the past year might have been obviated, and which, if followed, would insure a plenty for the farmer and at the same time be of incalculable benefit to the whole people: A loss to an individual becomes to certain extent a public misfortune, and when the loss general among an important class of individuals, such as farmers are, it then becomes a serious public calamity.

To guard, as far as possible, against a tleman. recurrence of the disasters of the past year should be the aim of every well-wisher to the success and prosperity of our people, and we offer a few suggestions, hoping they may be of some value, not only to the farmers as a class, but to our citizens generally.

In the first place, a very much higher cultivation is absolutely necessary. The earth is not ungenerous, but man is both ungenerous and stingy in his treatment of the soil, from which he expects a harvest. Not that men intend to be mean and stingy but in the desire to have a large acreage under cultivation they cannot treat the land generously. To explain: If two ecres can be made, by a higher cultivation, to produce one hundred bishels of corn. which it now takes five acres to accomplish, there would-with the exception of the extra labor and expense in enriching those two acres-be an entire saving of labor and expense on three acres. Three acres of fencing, ploughing, planting, hoeing and harvesting would be saved, and while the uncultivated acres would be none the poorer, that which is cultivated would be in much better condition, and is the high state of cultivation is continued the land would continually improve in productive capacity. Nor is this all. The land which produces the largest crops incomparing the results as indicated above t will be found that the larger crop produced on the smaller acreage will show a gain, if calculated by weight (which is the only just way of buying or selling) of from ten to fifteen per cent.

We need more farmers and less ponderous, nuwieldy plantations with their interminable lines of fencing which cost nearly as much to keep in repair as an average crop will bring in the market. We care not how much land is cultivated. but it should be borne in mind that skin-one reserved for the homestead into the market at reasonable prices, while no one may raise quite so large a crop as heretodricks, who will have 197 votes, or twelve fore, the aggregate yield from the same number of acres will be much larger, for as a matter of course, each one would endeavor to raise as much as possible, on the small amount cultivated. To do this more fertilizers would be used, and the land enriched to its highest productive ca-

But this is not all. By having ten men to own and cultivate the soil which is now owned and skinned by one, there will not only be better farming and larger and better crops, but there will be virtually a corresponding reduction in taxation. It is ten men paying the taxes where one man has had to pay them, who is consequently relieved of nine-tenths of his burden.

Nerve Inquietude and its Remedy Restless nerves, at least those that are constantly so, are weak ones as well. The true way to tranquilize them thoroughly is to strengthen them.
