Yes, they used to call me 'Whisky Bill, down town,' he replied, as he moved along and made room, 'but it is weeks since I heard the name. No wonder they think me dead, for I've not set eyes on the old crowd for months, and I do.'t want to for months to come. 'They tell me you have quit drinking. One could see that by your fac .' 'I hope so. I haven't touched a drop since February. Before that I was half-drunk day in and day out, and more of a brate than a man. I don't mind saying that my wife's death set me to thinking, but I didn't stop my liquor, God forgive me, but I was diuik when she died, half-drunk at the grave, and I meant to go on a regular spice that night. It was low down, sir, but I was no better than a brute those days.' 'And so you left your motherless children at home and went out and got drunk?' 'N . I a d I me at to, but I didn't. The poor things were crying all day, away in bed before I went out. Drunk r sober, I never struck one of th m blow, and they never ranfrom me when I staggered home. There's four of 'em in there, and the youngest isn t quite four years yet. I got the older ones in bed all right, and then came little Ned. He had oried him elf to sleep, and he called for mother as soon as I woke him. Until that night I never had that boy on my knee, to say nothing of putting him to bed, and you can guess these big fingers made slow work with the hooks and buttons. Every minute he kept saying mother didn't do that way, and mother done hiding their heads under the quits to drown their sobs. When I had his c othes off and his night-gown on I was ashamed and put down, and when the o dest saw tears in my eyes and jumped out of bed to put her arms around my neck I dropped the name of "Whiskey Bill' right then and forever.'
