VIEWS AND REVIEWS.

The complaint is made that English girls are becoming as free and independent as American girls.

Sitting Bull was so named, according to Joaquin Miller because, being shot through the legs in battle, he sat upright, and continued to fight with the fierceness of a wounded buffalo bull.

The fund raised for the widow of Lieut. Henson, who died of yellow fever last year, has been so invested as to yield her an income of $900 a year.

Archery in England have for centuries been supplied with bows of English make. Two years ago the manufacturers were begun in this country, and American bows are now largely exported to England.

The Comedie Francaise gave forty-two representations in London, and the receipts amounted to $99,025. The comedians received $1,290 per night, which left for the managers and the expenses $48,675.

A balloon, seven miles above the earth, struck a cloud so cold that icicles forth with attached themselves to the beards and moustaches of the aerial voyagers. It was on the 15th of June, over Rouen, France.

The strong-minded leaders of the fair sex in Boston are disgusted because only 200 ladies in that great city have registered for the coming school elections, a which time female suffrage becomes a legal right.

The Philadelphia Times thinks that "between the dangers of being whacked over the head by a policeman and gored to death by a stray steer, walking in the streets of New York is getting to be decidedly hazardous."

Leo XIII was much disquieted on hearing that threats against the life of King Leopold had been made by or were attributed to Catholic fanatics, and telegraphed the King an expression of deep regret and sympathy.

Dean Stanley has granted a site for a memorial of the late Prince Louis Napoleon in Westminster Abbey. It is in a recess in Henry VII's Chapel, near the spot where Cromwell's remains lay till they were disturbed at the Restoration.

Women's fashions in Paris are said to be in a state of chaos. Worth's new designs are marked by great simplicity; but of late Worth has been successfully rivalled by other men dressmakers, and some of these have gone to the other extreme, so that fashionable women hardly know what to wear.

An old New York merchant was dragged before a Police Court on Monday, charged with stealing the purse of one Carroll. On their arrival in court the accuser found that his purse had slipped down into his bootleg and the prisoner was released. It is greatly to the credit of the policeman who dragged him to the court that he did not administer the usual dose of club.

The trial of the Whittaker will case, in Philadelphia, led to the construction of an apparatus for the detection of forgeries and alterations in documents. The paper to be examined is placed at a focus between calcium lights, and the illumination is so powerful that the slightest scratch, difference of ink, or other evidence of tampering, is plainly revealed. A magic lantern was also used effectively, the genuine signature and the doubtful one being magnified on a large screen.

In Russia, as well as Germany, Austria and one or two minor northern realms, a nobleman's title is inherited by all his sons who transmit to their male offspring, and so on ad infinitum. Newly born nobles are not so numerous. They are forty or fifty Count Zichys in Hungary, three or four of whom are wealthy magistrates, and the rest pass their lives in the army or government offices on the smallest pay. In Galicia there are entire villages where every peasant pays his right to preface his name with the title of Prince.

Building in New York City has about got back to ante-panic conditions. The number of buildings for whose erection permits were obtained during the first six months of the current year was 1,163, a larger number than in any half year since the real estate bubble of 1871 was blown. On the other hand, the buildings put up there were largely stores and big blocks, while the building now is nineteenth-century dwellings houses, flats and tenements. The total estimated cost of the buildings now under construction, $11,000,000, is two-thirds that of the buildings ten years ago, due in part to greater cheapness in material and labor, but also to be attributed to the change in the character of the buildings themselves.

THE YELLOW FEVER.

This terrible scourge has not only become thoroughly fastened in Memphis with all the fearful reality of an epidemic, from which there can be no reasonable hope of relief until the cool nights and frosts of October, but it is slowly, irresistibly, but certainly spreading to other places. Many of the refugees who fled from the doomed city after the fever had been pronounced epidemic, carried with them the germ of the disease, either already lurking in the system or hidden in the clothing, only awaiting the first favorable opportunity to make its appearance and do its fearful work.

New Orleans, under the most rigid quarantine regulations was confident that immunity was secured to her people, but it has broken out in that city, though not yet assuming the proportions to make it an epidemic. In the latter city, as in the case of the outbreak of the fever at Memphis, it was not an importation of the present season, but sprang into existence in the same locality where it raged the most fearfully and fatally last year.

Grenada, where the fever raged so fatally last year, has as yet escaped unscathed, but we have grave apprehensions for the safety of that city. In Memphis and New Orleans the germs of the disease were lurking during the cool months of the winter in the decayed wood of the buildings or in the carpets or upholstery of the furniture, and in many instances in the clothing which had been thrown aside during the winter months, but which was again assumed with the advent of the heated term caused development. The weather has been so pitifully favorable for its development and progress, and should the same conditions exist in Grenada which we have indicated in the two other cities, she stands in fearful peril.

A COMPLIMENT FROM BOSTON.

We have been at a loss sometimes to know how to properly class the Boston Herald. Whether we should call it a Republican paper with decided independent proclivities or an independent paper with decided Republican proclivities, is a question we are unable to satisfactorily answer. It professes to be independent, and in many things it certainly is. It is very ably conducted and its articles are generally fair and just to all parties.

In a recent issue it contained a lengthy editorial article relative to the South from which we clip the following extract:

One of the marks of good breeding in the South is the ability to converse well. Conversation is cultivated as a fine art. Almost everybody talks, and talks well. The conversational vocabulary of Southerners is well stored with good English words. There is a certain old-fashioned way of pronouncing many words due to the fact that conversation, and not books, gives the law to pronunciation.

Such a compliment coming from Boston, which claims to be the "Athens of America," and boasts of its refinement and "cultured," ought to be thankfully appreciated, as no doubt it will be. To be a good conversationalist is one of the most desirable of accomplishments. It is both an art and a science which it is not possible for everyone to possess or acquire. To some it is natural and easy, while to others, it is an acquirement gained by patient study and care. It is not always the case that good talkers are profound thinkers, but it is an almost invariable rule that those possessing intellectual greatness are admirable in conversation. We flatter ourselves that our contemporary has been just in its discrimination in this particular, relative to the Southern people.

At the recent French fair in London, a solemn old man asked the pretty actress who presided at one of the booths the price of tea. "One shilling," she replied, and he put down a shilling. Before handing him the cup, she raised it to her lips, and observed that the price was now a sovereign. The solemn gentleman gravely replaced his shilling with a sovereign, and said: "Be good enough to give me a clean cup."

Aaron Smith led a mob that hanged George Moore, at Carlisle, Ind., and was complimented by his comrades for his boldness in that outrage. A few nights afterward, a party of fun-loving young men dragged him out of his bed, put a rope around his neck, and told him that his death hour had come. They would have been puzzled to answer if he had asked them what he had done to displease them; but to their astonishment, he confessed numerous thefts, and abjectly begged for mercy. He is not the popular man that he was before this trial of his qualities.

Julia and Pauline, figurantes at a theatre, have a little tiff. "I hate you so, you mean thing," says Julia, "that I wish you hadn't a brooch to your back!" "And I hate you so," retorts Pauline, "that if you were drowning before my eyes I wouldn't lift my little finger to give you a cup of cold water—there!"

The boy stowed on the burning deck, He wished that he were dead: Till all of a sudden into the river He dashed his head.

The steamer steamed upon its way, The boy, oh! where was he? He was kicking his heels in the tumbling surf As jolly as he could be.

—Kansas City Times.
