Map of Gettysburg. We were shown yesterday by Sherit Manning, three separate maps of each day's battle at Gettysburg, commencing with the first engagement on the 1st day of July, 1863, and ending on the night of the 3d of July, or the early morning of the 4th, when the Confederate troops with drew. The maps seem to be an accurate representation of the ground occupied by each army, and are we presume in the main correct, although in some minor details in the disposition of troops on the Confederate side, there are a few slight inaccaracies, which we discovered on a close examination. The maps are drawn by Col. A. B. Bachelder, formerly of th Federal army, and were presented to Sheriff Manning, who was on 'tother' side during the war, by his old orps com mander, General H. G. Wright, of the 6th Army Corps on the Federal side.

The directors went over the ground and closely inspected the work so far accomplished, which considering the difficulties to be surmounted seems consider. able. Work was begun April 1st, but a delay of six weeks was occasioned by the cutting away of the dam in Holly Shelter Creek by some opponents of the work These parties have been restrained by the courts from further interference, and it is hoped they are convinced that the present inconvenience to a few is only a matter of necessity in prosecuting plans that may result in great public good. Notwithstanding this interruption the canal way has been opened sixty feet wide, and the sluice way cut for one and a quarter miles, and three tide water creeks effectually dammed, extending from the North East river across one end of Holly Shelter Creek, and within a short distance of the second bend. The engineer is now ready to turn the water into the sluice way as soon as sufficient healway is obtained; and, if favorable water continues, th prospects are flattering for obtaining a navigable channel specially; provided the efforts of the directors are cordially seconded by the stockholders. The section cut through is thought to be the most difficult on the route, being heavily timbered and having less fall of water. It was determined to devote every energy to this section in order to test the practicabilty of the sluicing process, and to this end it was ordered that an assessment of five per cent. on the stock should be collected each month. The accounts of the Superintendent were examined, and the expenditures found to have been made as economically as possible.
