The ringing of the market bell at 7 season. It is now dark at 7 o'clock, and the stores, as a general thing, are closed by that hour.

The Fayetteville Examiner says: The Criminal Court of New Hanover county is one of the institutions that the people will do well to preserve. Justice is executed more promptly on criminals in New Hanover county than anywhere else in North Carolina.

THE MURDERER'S DOOM.

Stephen Richardson Hung for the Murder of Lucy Phinney—His Last Moments on Earth—Brave and Plucky to the End—His Neck Broken
By the Fall.

Stephen Richardson, who was convicted of murder at the last term of the Criminal Court, and who was sentenced to be hung to-day between the hours of 10 a. m. and 4 p. m., expired his crime to day at 20 minutes to 1 o'clock, on the same gallows on which Alan Mathis was launched into eternity some months ago. Notwithstanding the fact that it was known that the execution would be in private, thousands of men, women and children, drawn thither by a morbid curiosity, assembled around the jail yard in hopes of catching a glimpse of the doomed man as he was lunched into eternity. Richardson was very composed, and signified his willingness to die. Yesterday he stated to the workman who was engaged in cutting a door through the south wall of the jail, leading into the gallows, that it would be the

GREATEST DISAPPOINTMENT
of his life if he was not hung to-day.
He said he was resigned and ready to die, and was certain of everlasting happiness. He spent most of the time yesterday in prayer and earnest thought and had the Communion administered to him.
Wednesday he was baptized in the Methodist faith by the Rev. Cornelius Sampson, who has been imparting religious instruction to him since his conviction.
He rested well last night and this morning partook of a slight breakfast which he ate mechanically. Since his incorporation he has not seen his wife, who is said to be slightly demented by reason of the blows inflicted on her head by him, but on yesterday he was visited by his sister, Mary Simmons, to whom he desired that his body should be turned over.

About 12 o'clock High Sheriff Manning, followed by the jury and county officials, marched from the Court House to the jail yard and ascended the scaffold. The ministers of the different colored churches of the city were with the condemned in his cell and their prayers and admonitions could be distinctly heard by those on the scaffold.

The ropes, trap, etc., were thoroughly examined by the Sheriff in order to prevent any mishaps or bungling in the unpleasant duty he as High Sheriff was cal-ed upon to perform.

THE HEARSE AND COFFIN arrived a few minutes before 12 o'clock and the latter was deposited on the ground under the gallows. The crowd had so gathered around the hearse as to require the aid of the police to move the crowd to make room for the solemn cortege which bore the last earthly tenement for the body of the doomed man. At 10 minutes past 12 o'clock the ministers signified their readiness to appear when the heavy iron door swung on its hinges and

THE SAD PROCESSION, headed by the Rev. J. G. Frye, marched down the west corridor, thence up the south corridor to the new door and on to the gallows. Richardson came out by the side of Rev. Cornelius Sampson, with a detachment of the Sheriff's guard behind him. He smiled as he recognized his friends and acquaintances and bade them good-bye in a strong, clear voice, not the slightest fear or tremor being perceptible as he grasped their extended hands with both of his, which were securely tied at the wrists.

At 12 minutes past 12 o'clock the doomed man stepped on the stand amid the stinging of the attending ministry and looked around the crowd, making nods of recognition to those he knew. He was very

COMPOSED AND CHEWED T BACCO, and occasionally expectorated on the death trap. During the prayer delivered by the Rev. J. G. Frye he knelt on the edge of the trap and would frequently raise his eyes, which were open during the entire prayer. At the conclusion of the prayer, the Sheriff asked if he wished to say anything, when the reply,

"YES, SIR," in a strong firm voice was heard by all those around. He spoke for about five minutes, stating that he had made his peace with his Maker and that he was ready and willing to die. He said he did not dread death; that he had, through the mercy of Jesus Christ, put the last enemy, Death, under his feet, and that he would to day climb the ladder that Jacob saw in the cloud leading up to Heaven. He begged others to confess their God and to profit by his sad ending.

He then recited

THE PARTICULARS OF THE MURDER
as follows: On the evening of the homicide he went to his house to see that everything was right and came involuntarily in an altercation of words with his wife, when old man Phinney told him not to use his name in quarrels with his wife. He then quarrelled with Phinney when the latter drew his gun on him.
Richardson says he then ran back to his house and in the

HEAT OF PASSION
caught up a shovel and ran back to where his antagonist was, when a general melee ensued. He struck each of his assailants and at the corner of Sixth and Harnett streets he struck old man Phinney a blow which felled him to the ground. The cry of murder! murder! murder! was raised when he ran and was subsequently captured. He says the mistake he made was in not standing his ground and letting the officers of the law take him with old man Phinney and his (Pa's) gun lying at his feet. He spoke in a clear voice and showed no signs of tremor, and called upon God as his witness as to the correctness of his version of the murder of which he was convicted. He further stated that he had no idea of committing the deed when he went to the house, and that the report that he had threatened that evening to kill them was a falsification of the greatest kind.

At 12:30 Sheriff Manning read the death warrant, and at 12:34 Richardson stepped upon the trap, and the Sheriff told him to say his prayers. While his arms and legs were being pinioned, the attending ministers sang the last hymn he heard on earth.

THE NOSE AND BLACK CAP were adjusted at 12:37 while the rope was being adjusted the Sheriff asked if it was too tight, when Richardson answered, "No, thank you. It's very comfortable." He then shook hands with the Sheriff and the trap fell with a dead heavy thud against a stanchion made to catch it. Richardson fell eight feet and his neck was broken by the fall. He died very easy. There were after the fall some slight muscular contortions and in twelve minutes after the fall Richardson was pronounced dead by the physicians, Drs. Winants and Burbank. When he fell his feet very nearly struck a man under the trap who was passing heedlessly across from one side of the enclosure to the other. (When life was pronounced extinct the body was lowered into the coffin and the remains were carried to the residence of his sister, Mary Simmons, from whence they were taken this afternoon and interred in Pine Forest cemetery. The doomed man was plucky and game to the last and showed no more signs of emotion than one would if he was getting ready to take a plunge in the river for a bath instead of a plunge into that mysterious bourne from whence no traveler returns. Richardson's finale should be a warning to others. Had he not been a too frequent disciple of Boeotus he might have lived to a ripe old age instead of dying on the gallows in compliance with the scriptural denunciation: Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed.

The Cape Fear Academy.

been abandoned, thus affording a more thorough attention to the various branches of a good academical education.
