JOHN W. SHACKELFORD,

OF ONSLOW.

Maine is quiet at last. Blaine has abandoned, per force of circumstances, his plan for counting in his man. He has subsided. Plaisied is the man, and all seem to acknowledge it now.

It is a mere straw but, goodness! how it does show which way the wind is blowing. The Republican Hancock and English Club in New York City now numbers nearly 1,000 votes. The names are all enrolled to prove it. This is a difference of 2,000, counting as gains and losses.

New Jersey is safe for Hancock. An eminent Democrat in that State reports to the National Committee that it is his candid belief, from a careful review of the situation, that New Jersey will poll a large majority for Hancock, in proportion to the vote cast, than any other State at the North.

Gov. Hendricks, Mr. English and Mr. Barnum have all said that they believe Indiana safe to the Democracy next month. They are cheerful and hopeful. Hendricks and English are on the spot and Barnum is Chairman of the National Committee. Surely, they ought to know what they are talking about.

There is some really serious talk now of carrying New Hampshire for the Democrats. The result in Maine has given a wonderful impetus to the efforts of our friends in that State. In 1878, Head, Republican candidate for Governor, was elected by a majority of 391 over both Democrats and Greenbackers. The total vote was 75,959, of which Head polled 50 25 per cent, the Democratic candidate 40,98 per cent, and the Greenback 8,56 per cent.

Here is the closing part of Mr. Groesbeck's remarks at Cincinnati last Friday night. The sentiments he expresses are worthy of the speaker and worthy of the Democratic party. Could we say more?

It has seemed to me that many good Republicans have come to desire a change, but hesitate to make it because of the South. The leaders in power understand this, and purposely keep alive this apprehension. With each recurring election they beat their drums and sound a new alarm, as if the North and South were still at war. Every idle or foolish word is exaggerated into a threat, and every local breach of the peace into an act of disloyalty, and the entire South is made responsible. It will ever be so if by such unfriendly and sectional agitators they can retain their power. What of the South? Was not their surrender absolute, and have not all its terms and conditions been complied with? But they are still proud. Would you have them get down on their knees to you? They are brave. Must they become cowardly and would you have them so? Who are they? Not strangers; they are the children of a common ancestry, and born, as it were, under the same roof. Their forefathers and ours united their voices in declaring our independence, and fought side by side to achieve it; and they have done as much as we to secure the blessings we enjoy. We have become very great. Our resources are infinite, our domain a continent, our possibilities boundless. Their work is in it all, and equal to our own.

Two policies are before us—one of alienation, the other of brotherhood. One leads to discord and animosities and perpetual and increasing dangers. It may terminate in an Ireland or Poland in our midst, or something even worse. Its end cannot be good. The other leads to harmony and safety and assured prosperity. Garfield represents the policy of alienation; Hancock represents the policy of brotherhood.

Hancock did more for us than Garfield to overcome the rebellion, and he can do far more to heal its wounds. Let us be wise and heal them. Now is our opportunity.

When a man whose poverty and his earthly necessities, like the apothecary who sold Homer the fatal draught, tortures his soul into committing crime, one would think that after the offender had suffered punishment, a true Christian charity might throw the mantle of forgetfulness over the deed and over him who had sinned. But what shall be said of those who for the apparent sake of correcting a published account seek to rehash and revive a melancholy incident of the kind in the career of one of the first men in the nation? A man who in his early youth, through a momentary temptation made greater by the necessities of life and his desire to keep up a genteel appearance among his associates, in an evil moment yielded to the tempter and committed an act for which he paid a severe penalty and suffered disgrace and degradation at the time. We say does it not seem that a true Christian spirit would throw the mantle of forgetfulness over the poor, unfortunate sinner, and especially when he has been known to have atoned so fearfully for his conduct? We do not think an offence of the kind referred to ought to be condoned at the time, no matter who the offender, but after the lapse of so many years, and the offender—who has given such distinguished service to the country and filled the highest office, but two, in the United States for a period of thirty years—has laid quietly in his grave for more than a decade, we think common Christian charity, not to say decency, ought to prompt the living to let the poor man's name rest in peace. Human nature is very frail, and we are all liable to err; while we may not violate the law of the land, we may be indiscreet in other matters which we, all, every member of the human family, man, woman and child alike would like to invoke the true spirit of charity to cover with her benevolent mantle of forgetfulness. Why not then extend the same charity to others, that we would ask for ourselves? It is necessary for the preservation of law, order and good morals, that all crime should be punished, and this is as it should be, but what sort of spirit is it that pursues a dead man into the grave, in order to show our knowledge of the real facts of the case? We think the discussion of the question in exceeding bad taste, to say the very least.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 21, 1880. The friends or opponents of Mr. Blaine do not recognize in that gentleman's late despatches the clearness and coolness he has heretofore displayed. His surrender of the State to Plaisied in the first telegram, his recantation of it for Davis in the second, his doubts of the result in the third, are not often the old style. But that which most annoyed those who know him is the long despatch published this morning in which Ex-Senator Barnum is taken to task for suggesting that the Republicans intended to "count-out" or otherwise defraud Governor Plaisied, while in the same despatch he acknowledges for the first time discrepancies in the lists of votes sent out by his servants, the Associated Press Agents of Maine—discrepancies corrected in Democratic papers received here last week. It may be that Mr. Blaine is the most honorable politician in the country, but in that case it is strange that none of his familiar friends think themselves sure of his appreciation unless they have bribed somebody or reported something that is not true. The popular verdict all over the country will be that Blaine and his friends determined to swindle Plaisied and the people, but found the job too great a one.

This conviction, hardly less than the result itself in Maine, will have influence in other States. I recall large numbers of Democratic papers throughout the country, which guided by Associated Press reports and the conclusions of the Republican Legislative Committee, and not knowing that the Republicans of Maine were sinners above all others in the manipulation of election returns and results, conceded the alleged great guilt of Governor Garcelon and his council last year, and had no words of blame for Mr. Blaine or his associates. They were wiser this year.

After all the standard silver dollar is coming into use. It is all the time gaining in popularity, and even those who most opposed its issue, and who doubtless still object on principle, concede the growing willingness of the people to handle money in that form. Postmaster General Maynard has given the express companies a lift by denying mail facilities to certain lottery companies. The order of the Postmaster General is substantially the same as one issued by Mr. Key, some time since, and subsequently revoked. Secretary Schurz returned here on Monday night, after a long visit to various Indian Agencies, and says he is greatly encouraged by what he saw.

By the way, a profitable position in the Secretary's Department happened to be vacant, the Secretary appointed a dyed-in-the-wool Democrat to the place on the day after his return. Recent political events have done much to convince other Cabinet officials, besides Mr. Schurz, that offices should not always be given upon purely partisan grounds. GURDGE.

Arousing its Readers.

An alarm of fire at midnight is a startling thing, but not half so startling to many who hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of their own dangerous physical condition. Thousands of thousands are hurrying to their graves because they are carelessly indifferent to the insidious inroads of disease and the means of cure. It is the mission of H. H. Warner & Co., with their Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to arouse men to a sense of their danger and then cure them.—Memphis Appeal.
